THANKSGIVING DAY.

How it was Observed—Sermons, Churches, &c.

Yesterday was cold and clear and sunshiny—just the day for Thanksgiving. The air was sufficiently invigorating to make one alive to all that was enjoyable; just cold enough to put one's circulation into active motion to the test, and to give a relish to the turkey, which is never realized in the full, except on a clear, cold day. So was it just cold enough to jog the memory in relation to the necessities of others, and the glowing fire in the parlor served to warm the blood and make the hand move in consonance with the promptings of a kind and liberal heart. The result was a large and heartfelt attendance upon the various charitable institutions in the City. The House of Industry and the Refuge Home Mission, on the Five Points, were well attended, and the minister received unusual encouragement in return for the pecuniary gives by their usual congregations. The appearance of the "Home for the Friendless" showed that there was nothing lacking, for the benefaction to that Institution had so many friends as they could accommodate. The other charitable institutions were equally well remembered. In fact, not one of them, so far as our reporters could observe, had any occasion to remember that we have recently had our calls blown away and our coffers emptied by a panic. Business was almost entirely suspended, and in nearly all the churches there were religious services, and in some of them there were sermons delivered which deserved much larger audiences than heard them, though the churches were generally well filled. We publish sketches of a few of the discourses delivered.

MR. BEECHER ON CRISES.

Mr. BEECHER made a strong discourse yesterday on Commercial Crises and their Uses. He found his text in three verses of the fifth chapter of Romans, beginning: "We glory in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed." He argued that this declaration was beautifully reliable, because it exhibited the result of the dealings of Providence with men. He was bold to assert that the art of being happy is less understood in this country than in any other; we make immense preparations to be happy, but spend all the time in getting together the material. How know how to reconcile contentment with aspiration or with enterprise. Men, in respect to joy, are in a condition similar to that of the sailor at sea. They hear by a star, but never touch it or come apparently nearer it. Joy is always in the bud. It is an blossom-to-morrow—men forgetting that they never live in to-morrow, but in to-day. What we call enjoyments are in reality but paroxysms. And in adversity, we learned ourselves when only the top leaves of our fairest tree are withered, refusing to shelter our souls under the trunks and branches that remain. In the midst of this adversity comes this strange-fixed Thanksgiving. There are doubtless many here that have anything in them but thanksgiving; yet nevertheless God has sent in the revolving year this solemn anniversary. Not long ago it was noon all the day round. Now, it is midnight for the whole 24 hours. Then, it was too bright;—now, it is too dark. It became us to frame our judgment of both sides with care. For even if we regard ourselves in the light of beasts, simply, we have in the main enough to eat and to wear, and stalls wherein to close our eyes and get up and lie down at our ease. But if we are to be not to feel, something, we shall find that stalwart qualities have been wrought in us by this adversity—and that is reason for thanksgiving. "We glory in tribulation." The blacksmith who blows his fire upon himself, does not do it for the sake of heating it, nor does he pound iron upon the anvil for the sake of pounding it, but that each process may serve to shape it to a useful purpose. So our tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope—and that hope is a large, symmetrical, regulated condition.—By a series of apt illustrations, Mr. BEECHER then proceeded to demonstrate the power of Commerce in effecting the civilization of the world. Since the French Emperor planted his bloody foot upon the throne, events had occurred which, one or two years ago, would have drawn all the world with the throes of a mighty crisis, and Russia had come to meet her; navies, compared with which the Invincible Armada was but a fleet of yachts, had sailed from distant waters; yet these events, at which the world would have trembled all to-day, were lightly spoken by our people simply as matters of news, and served to sell the daily papers well. Then came the Chinese trouble and the terrific Indian mutiny—sudden, numerous, awful. These were passing events, and there came upon this Western shore the news of those who had laid their plans too large. A bank failure in Ohio—and it is heard further than the sound of the gospel. The Banks of Pennsylvania suspend—the commercial world begins to rock. The Banks of New-York are stopped—the world quivers. Commerce, by a look, has cast upon the proud heading, the people of that Island whose top is narrow, but whose base is broad; and Commerce supplants War in human history, and is the master. The sceptre has been and the king's sceptre are no longer the world's rulers. The power of the world is now with the people of the world. The king's hand is but a powerful fear; the banker's. Not that Commerce has not its great powers without drawback. Every great power in a book, which first protects and then overwhelms it. The conditions of growth of our age and nation are unlike those of past times. The civilization wrought for the old nations. Germany, Great Britain and France came up by fifties and hundreds of years. But ours had an inferior infancy; only a historic one. We began with all the wants of civilized, came gradually through the centuries. Those wants were matured. All tastes, necessities, desires were developed. Nothing was wanting but means to supply them. The result was, first, extraordinary impulses to production; second, extraordinary means of operating. It has been said our people are more avaricious than others—they stick more at the value of pence and pounds; verdict this faculty, New-England would never have made a state, and our prairies would still be home of the Indian and the buffalo. We had no peat to build our Cathedrals and churches; to make our roads, or span our streams with bridges; to launch our ships; to cut canals, or to clear the land from obstructing forests. Yet we had these tastes, the same intelligence, the same wants as the older nations. We were compelled to meet all the varied civilization within, by a crescent all the world without. And as money was the tool, no wonder we made good use of the tool-chest; and we have made it our servant and cuts upon our hands. We are, therefore, to look at these things in a large and philosophical way, to see that the leading element which pervades the American mind is hope; not indeed that hope of which the Apostle speaks, "which maketh not ashamed" for here makes us ashamed every day. Our ambitious works cut all grand enterprises, but are subject to various diseases. Gambling, we call a vice, but it is only the lowest manifestation of the family of hope. The element of speculation, or as it is sometimes called, "operating," is derived from the same feeling. Though other affections come into play, there is the steam that developes and drives all our machinery. This zest-element gives us not ventures only, but audacity also. We needed men who would walk on nothing; and we had them. We needed men who would go further than they could see, and see further than they could go; and we had them. To build all our factories in New-England required something more than is needed to work them now. It takes our scheming, hopeful, enterprising, venturesome men who laid the foundations for the society of our cautious conservatives. Nor are these our labors any more enemies than the light and heavy dragoons of an army. Both are useful, and they are friends, if they only knew it. There are two kinds of schemers, if you please—whom we call schemers. Some men are like oaks.—Strong, sound, they lie prone, and are good only for the ship's uses. Others are like iron-pins, which bend up only that they may be knocked down again. Such is the conservative man's pilot. The other is the man of a man. "He venturer too far," he is the conservative man's pilot. The other is the man upon, you will avoid. It does not be-[illegible] that man. Some men are like a [illegible] cut into pieces; each fragment [illegible] and grows out a new tail, and wriggles away as lively as ever. When the community is [illegible] a pressure, then is as regulated [illegible] gradual tendencies towards expansion. [illegible] to be a large and charitable way of [illegible] belonging to society. We must learn [illegible] in a community which is [illegible] plans, that any person can [illegible] the path or do regulate it but that [illegible] through mutations of contraction [illegible] some apples in a barrel will rot; all will be tainted that lie side by side with them.

Mr. BEECHER claimed that the American nation has not lost a hair's weight by all this trouble. Even that which falls upon individuals is but temporary and is compensated by collateral benefits. He discovered many causes for thankfulness. The great, underlying national energy of health was never so eminent. Men had been able to bear up under the squall that had overtaken them because their health, bodily and mental, had made them strong to bear. This was cause to be thankful. The abundance which prevails throughout the land was never greater. The average virtue, intelligence and progress manifested in the land is not touched materially by the things that have taken place. No retrogression has taken place. No part of the public conscience has occurred. Looking at the last two years we have, on the whole, been a year for thanks. Our material interests are pointing unmistakably toward the victory of Free Labor. Free labor was never so strong as it is to-day, and the theory of Free Labor was never so well understood. Discussion was never so willing and permitted. Churches which refused discussion have begun to discuss. Slave-holding is to plant Slavery in under discussion everywhere. The price of slave is falling. Western States growing up with ready markets, have converted many a New-York merchant to a belief in free labor, which has more wants, and asks easier credits, and is better pay than slave. A special victory has been vouchsafed us in Kansas. The way is above the ground, and no treading or mowing can mar it. Seed grows in the country as parsley in a garden. It can't help growing. You cannot destroy seed when circumstances unlike fair at the bottom. The late collapse was but the shutting up of sea blocks to open another. No ship rots at our wharves. No store fails. No wheel rusts because it rests. The railroads which have made us so much trouble will not perish; they exist. We shall lose no art. Science will draw back no single discovery. Nothing but a little temporary comfort is lost. Hope is the same. Heaven is the same. Our boundless opportunities are the same. It is not the head that has suffered. It is a little less in the pocket; that is all. For five or ten years to come we will probably be prudent. Some will be prudent for two years—they would die if they continued longer. When we fall again, as we probably shall, in ten, fifteen or twenty years, it will not be in the same way. We shall not break out again in the same spot. The question now is, how many have learned humility? How many have provided themselves with a tower of strength by profiting by the sharp lessons they have received? How many have learned to think less of their business and more of the future?

REV. DR. CHAPIN ON OUR CAUSES FOR THANKSGIVING.

The Fourth Universalist Church, on Broadway, was well filled yesterday morning. The Thanksgiving sermon was preached by the minister, Rev. Dr. CHAPIN. His text was Matthew vi, verse 11: "Give us this day our daily bread." The Lord's Prayer, said the Reverend gentleman, links in one chain the experience of man's entire life. It suits youth as well as age. Like the mysterious tent in the fable, an infant might carry it in his hand, and yet it might be spread to cover legions. It is true, we are not limited to its formula, in our prayers, but it breathes the spirit of all prayer.

The clause of the prayer chosen for the text was most appropriate. They had met, not, the preacher trusted, in mere obedience to a formal proclamation, but in the gratitude of their hearts to thank God for the blessings of another year. Though man had been baffled, Nature had done her duty. The early and the latter rain had descended, the hills were clothed with verdure, and the valleys were filled with grain. Nature had performed her great material sacraments of birth and baptism, of growth and fruition, and now she was preparing to lie down in a calm repose.

It was true that there was gloom around us. But though the City was sad, the country was richer. In the great essentials of wealth, the country was never more abundant. There was peace in our borders, and we were free from war, pestilence and famine. For those blessings, who would not express his gratitude, not as a mere formal ceremony, but with the vital thankfulness of the heart? And in the expression of that gratitude,—in the prayer that accompanied its expression, no prayer could be so appropriate as "Give us this day our daily bread." It was a sentiment for all possible occasions,—for hard times and for good times.

In the first place, the substance of the prayer, offered itself for consideration. It was a prayer for daily bread. But was material bread or spiritual nourishment intended? There was usually in Christ's teaching a blending of the spiritual with the material. This prayer for daily bread, was a prayer for all which helped us to live, blending the great ends of life, meaning the literal bread for the body, and the spiritual food for the soul. Let not that clause in the Lord's prayer be altogether spiritualized away. It was necessary to have food for the body, before we could have food for the soul. Christianity honors our two-fold nature, provides both for our temporal and spiritual being. It is a religion that cries out for the highest spiritual wealth, and does not neglect our bodily wants. It makes life in all its relations one integral life, teaching us that work for the right end must accompany prayer for that end, and that God works through natural laws. We recognise God in Nature when we utter the petition for daily bread. Christianity thus recognizes the useful, whatever antagonism there may be in some minds on that subject. There were many people who thought this world of no life consequence, that we should have as little to do with it as possible. From ancient times this diversity existed. PLATO contended for the first fair and the first good. BACON represented the class that contended for the useful, the printing press and the mariner's compass. In our own day RUSKIN was on the Platonic side, while MACAULAY was on the Baconian, and preferred a shoemaker to SENECA. They were both right, and both wrong. Taken together they were the hemispheres of the complete truth. Christ was the sum of each—the total sphere. He did not enslave man to utilities, but while he elevated him to stand, as it were, face to face with God, he went down and touched the needy want of the hour.

The prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread," had reference only to honest, temperate labor. By all intemperance, over-toil, haste to get rich, over-anxious seeking, we balk that prayer. We must take care that the body which is to be sustained by "daily bread" is not abused, but consecrated. Sometimes we sneer at the asceticism of the early Church, when its disciples deprived themselves, for devotion's sake, of fitting nourishment; but that was noble compared with the asceticism of wealth, which deprived the soul of culture. We had been too much devoted to that asceticism. One of the causes for thanksgiving on this occasion was the fact that God had rebuked our wealth-seeking, that he had tumbled our houses of cards about our heads. We ought to thank God for the financial lesson of this year. We had been living like splendid animals, having small regard for the high and holy. We had prayed for our daily bread, as politicians, men of pleasure, men of the world, money-seekers and changers, not considering that the prayer, as Christ taught it, was for all good of life, bodily and spiritual.

In what way, in the second place, was that prayer answered? All prayer must be accompanied by an earnestness on our part to receive the answer. We cannot have harvests without planting, nor food, by praying for it, without labor. It is true, there are mysterious agencies at work, the rain, the sun, the soil—agencies which bring God on earth among us now, as he was in the burning bush—agencies of which philosophy can give no account; but we must work for the harvest of our bodies and the harvest of our souls. There was one thing especially to be noticed about the prayer; it was "Give us, day by day, our daily bread,"—not in a large grasp at once, but day by day. Our trust in God was to be constant. There was here no petition for rapid or sudden wealth, but a patient and continual dependence on Him—a daily prayer, and a daily answer to that prayer. Then we pray for bread; we must expect the bread for which we work. The farmer who sows rye does not expect to get corn. What we work for we shall get. It is true that God works in the affairs of this world, but it is by the same law that corn comes from corn, and wheat from wheat.

Is not that law the cause of our present financial catastrophe? We have only got what we have planted. We sowed rye and expected corn. We merited the disappointment. Instead of blessings, we have "the bread of wickedness and the wine of violence" in our midst. Let us contemplate the civilization we boast of, not as that of Christianity, or the Nineteenth Century, but of the City of New-York. We have arts and sciences, institutions of learning, of charity, churches, and the nonsense of fashion, steel and whalebone, electricity, schools, rum shops, pretending to be closed, with one eye shut, and the other peeping round the corner, wide open—we have everything that characterizes the civilization of the age, but what else do we find? Civilization is not a matter for the surface only, but is an artesian well, going down into the heart of society, working from the centre to the circumference, as all great things do; and yet was it not a fact that it was not safe to go through the streets after dark, any more than to walk in the wilds of Timbuctoo, unless we are armed like a fifty-bladed penknife? Our ballot-boxes are set as if in the midst of an Indian war-dance, reeking with rum, and guarded by dirk and revolver. Do we call this civilization? Almost every night the shrieks of a violated life are heard in our streets, and God sees murder among us, as He might see it in the wastes of Africa or among the Apennines. We have much to be thankful for, it is true, but how much more should we have to be thankful for, if we had done our duty?

The spirit of the prayer "Give us this day our daily bread" was dependence on the Great Father, and the lesson taught us in the trials of the present year, was also the same dependence.

REV. DR. BETHUNE'S DISCOURSE.

After an earnest prayer for the mercy of God upon the poor at this inclement season and during the prevalence of the present dearth of employment, Rev. Dr. BETHUNE preached an eloquent and impressive discourse to a crowded congregation from the 15th and 16th verses of the last chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews—"By Him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. But, to do good and to communicate, forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

The Reverend Doctor commenced by observing that the ceremonies of "harvest home" came down from the Scandinavian worship. He regretted that the custom was disregarded by the descendants of those who were accustomed to so expressive an acknowledgment. The identity of "thank offerings" was traceable from the very gates of Eden, through all the forms of Pagan and Jewish and even of aboriginal American worship. The Jews had a junction and commingle of motives to state its harvests dizzied the brain with its immensity. The yield of the land in 1856, according to the Patent Office report, was $1,000,000,000, or about two and a half times the value of all the coinage of the nation from the beginning until the end of 1856. The Indian corn crop alone was worth more than all the gold that ever came from California. The 160,000,000 of bushels of 1856 was likely to be more than distanced in the present year, for it was probable that the United States would make up the deficiency of the crop in Canada. The cotton crop had risen from one million four hundred thousand in 1826-7 to nearly three millions in 1856-7. In the same years of foot America had now reached the point where Great Britain stood twenty years ago, and had increased our production to one million of tons, with a prospect of boundless increase, when our coal fields, which are three times as large as those of all the other countries combined, shall, by a better industrial policy, and by availing ourselves of the valuable invention of 1837, which applied anthracite to the manufacture of iron, be more effectively wrought. The last official accounts fix the manufacturing capital of 1850 at over five hundred millions of dollars, and the annual production of manufactures, including materials, at over one thousand millions. Our commerce exhibited the same ratio of increase with the other branches of industry, and of our 25,000 miles of Railroad, all but 1,400 had been the work of the last twenty years. This commercial emporium was a standing proof of the wealth of the country, for the whole nation contributed to its wealth. The valuation of property, real and personal, in it has risen to more than five hundred millions of dollars, and the returns of the Savings Banks, which some might regard as the lowest element of our wealth, though he esteemed it the most significant, showed that the whole amount received at the Savings Banks was more than one hundred and nineteen millions of dollars; that the whole amount paid was more than one hundred and two millions of dollars; and that the amount of interest paid on the whole was more than eleven millions of dollars; and that in our sixteen Savings Banks on the 1st of January, 1857, the whole amount on deposit was $32,500,000, payable to the working classes. We might well ask ourselves whether, in the face of such facts, we ought to yield to the despondency of doubtful times, and in the chagrin of recent losses forget the abundance of our blessings. The mere fact that more than one million of houses, or perhaps two millions, have been built in our domain in twenty years, spoke of a greater than even material wealth, and the new million of house-keepers since 1837 had done much to help on the work of the schoolmaster and preacher, and enlarge the true worth of the harvest. We would have a striking idea of the increase if we allowed eight persons to a house, and imagined 12,000,000 of people since 1838 sitting down to-day to a Thanksgiving dinner, in 1,500,000 houses, whether the last new palace erected in Fifth-avenue or the last log cabin built in the forests of Kansas. The dining-room sufficient to accommodate them all, supposing seats to be placed on both sides of the table would be about 2,300 miles long, and would reach nearly from New-York to San Francisco, or more than five times the length of Great Britain. If we allowed twenty-five feet to each house, the whole would form an unbroken avenue extending from New-York to the Pacific shore, and would leave a large surplus of houses. And if we wished to judge of the progress of the useful and beautiful arts, be sure to estimate it by the progress of the art that builds the houses for the families; for these demanded the employment of all the arts, both useful and ornamental. In the increase of colleges, of colleges, of newspapers, of libraries, and of all the other ideas of intellectual and educational progress, the results were proportionally great. And in the matter of letters—written letters—which did so much to educate both the mind and heart—whilst the number that passed through the Post-Office in 1837 was but thirty-seven millions, in 1856 it was one hundred and thirty-one millions. The circulation of books—and of the best books—had wonderfully increased. The 1,500 public and school libraries, reported in our last census, must have increased to nearly 20,000 within the present year, the works most in demand being biographies and histories, which were the best antidote to the baser publications that were so much fostered by bad people. A respectable gentleman of this City had recently indulged in some animadversions against the public schools, alleging that from their want of moral and religious education they might be looked upon as fostering crime. Before anything was said of the defects of our public schools—(and he admitted that they had some defects)—from that quarter, we might, perhaps, ask his Grace, the Archbishop, what proportion of those who have shown themselves in the Police reports of this City as practically schooled in crime, had been educated under the auspices of that Pontiff who holds his seat at Rome in the affections of his people by favor of French bayonets? The whole number of Bibles issued within the last twenty years from the Bible House, was 3,391,697, and the number of Testaments 6,450,594, being a total of 10,000,000. In religion a corresponding advancement was obvious. We could easily see that the religious preachers most conspicuous in America, within the last twenty years, had not urged their authority in threats of priestly excommunication, or of predestinarian fire and brimstone, but upon the love of God and the moral and spiritual worth of man. Whence, then, the reverend gentleman asked, the contest between all the plenty of the last twenty years and our present limitation. It was because the tares had been allowed to grow up with the wheat—tares, too, which, like those of Judea, looked very much like wheat, until about the harvest time, when they were found to yield no grain. The tares which grew up with all this wealth and worth of wheat, were Haste and Waste—haste to make money, and waste in spending it. The reverend gentleman dwelt on these topics at some length. He alluded passingly to two of the causes which were generally assigned as accounting for the prevailing panic—female extravagance and the banks. The one he attributed to the error of a man's balancing the debts he owes against the debts due him, and thus fostering a thoughtless expenditure and a flashy folly on the part of his family. Of the other, while admitting the excellence of the system, he said it would doubtless be sound that a Board of Bank Directors generally exhibited less of brains than their vaults did of bullion. He advocated the necessity for the maintenance of a balance not only in the monetary and commercial, but also in the intellectual and moral spheres. He referred to the fact that precisely 20 years ago, that is, on the 26th November, 1837, the church edifice that the present congregation had erected, on the corner of Spring and Mercer-streets, was destroyed by fire, and, in conclusion, contrasted the changes produced in that congregation in the years that had passed since then.

The benediction and the singing of an anthem appropriate to the day, closed the services.

SERMON OF REV. DR. PARKER.

Dr. JOEL PARKER, of the Fourth-avenue (Presbyterian) Church, preached from the text found at II Cor., ix. 15—"Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

Thanksgiving and praise, he said, constitute a large share of the duties we owe to God. The Psalms of David, the inspired liturgy of the ancient Church, consisted largely of thanksgiving and praise. Not less but more joyful is our Christian worship. Afflictions are occasional, scattered here and there to checker this earthly scene, while blessings are a continuous stream. There is scarcely any condition in which there are not many things to solicit our thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Hence the chief magistrate of our State appoints a day of public thanksgiving in this time of financial distress with the same general propriety as in seasons of more uniform prosperity.

In presenting the incitements to Thanksgiving, the pastor may limit himself to a survey of some special gifts or may exhibit a more general view of the divine mercy. I prefer for this occasion the more discursive and general view. Our text speaks of the greatest and most comprehensive of all the mercies of God. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. I need not say to you that the gift here referred to is Christ.

Its qualities are ineffable, whether we consider its magnitude and glory or its adaptedness to our necessities. As a pledge of the divine bounty it is large enough to assure us that no other needful good will be withheld. If God withheld not his well-beloved Son, but freely gave him for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

But I choose to consider the gift of Christ as the procurer or cause of all other Divine bestowments. I propose to exhibit these blessings chronologically, as far as the historical view of the subject is concerned; for it is on the stream of history that most of our blessings are borne to us:

1. The first influence of God's unspeakable gift is the reprieve and continuance of our ruined race. The language of law, "in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," was turned in a promise of Christ's intervention, else the first pair had been struck dead in the Garden. But a scheme of mercy protracted their earthly existence, and in successive generations brought us to the condition which the race occupies to-day, with a thousand millions of population upon the globe.

2. The next great gift, through Christ, was language. Language is a divine gift—miraculously bestowed upon our first parents, as it was afterward conferred in the gift of tongues to the Apostles.

3. The conservation and use of language is not less remarkable.

The confusion of tongues was a punishment for abuse of the gift, and yet used to create various nationalities and various culture.

These languages become two great families—the Oriental and the Western. God chose the Hebrew, a tongue of small vocabulary, and simple structure, to be the vehicle of another great gift—revelation. This language, preserved by the learning of the great lawgiver, Moses, skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, enriched, by the nomadic life, and further by the songs of the Warrior Prophet and his accomplished son, Solomon—this language labored for a thousand years to imbibe an exact theology; to generate ideas of holiness, and to clothe in the imagery of a beautiful and picturesque country, and agricultural and shepherd life, the ideas of the old prophets.

When these ideas had been imbedded as in a thick stratum of the growing language, God fossilized it, that it might be unchangeable.

The same hand that struck with death the moral influence of the Jewish stock paralyzed its tongue. As a martyr's corpse defies the power of his persecutors, so this dead language, forever after defied the power of the Rabbis to pervert the ideas thus locked up in the casements of a dead language.

After this period, God had prepared another tongue—the Greek—the language of exact philosophical analysis and speculation—of scientific history and dramatic and epic poetry—to be the vehicle of the more perfectly developed theology of the Christian Revelation.

Thence the kingdom of God passed in the on-going of its church life into the Latin tongue—the language of conquest and of legislation. Here the conquering Church entrenched itself; but after the fall of the Western empire, and especially under the influence of CHARLEMAGNE, the power of Christianity—not the ecclesiasticism or the liturgy, but the spiritual power of Christianity—passed into nations under the sway of the languages of modern Europe. Thence in the reformation this influence began to concentrate itself in the English tongue. Our language has thus become an important vehicle for Christianity, and we are blessed with having it for our vernacular.

Through this comes all our Christian institutions and their blessings.

We must now dwell largely on the connection of all this with our national advantages. Then we consider the blessings of the year in our Commonwealth, our City, our congregation, our respective families, and especially in the bearing of all these blessings on us individually, as indicating our obligations to join with the Apostles in saying, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

SERMON OF REV. DR. SPRING.

At Dr. PORTS' (Presbyterian) Church, corner of University-place and Tenth-street, Rev. Dr. GARDINER SPRING delivered the sermon yesterday morning, taking his text from Job, chap. 35, v. 10: "Where is God, my maker, who giveth songs in the night?" It was a sweet thought, he said, that in the midst of the darkness, the sorrows and afflictions of this world, God giveth songs in distress—the power to bear up under suffering and trial, an alleviation of our burdens when they seem too heavy. Dr. SPRING divided his discourse into six parts.

I. There was a night in the world of nature which is vocal with song. All nature rejoiced in the light of day. To men, to the beasts of the field, to the insect and to the opening flowers, the sunlight was equally grateful. We all loved the light, yet we could not but admire God's wisdom in sometimes shutting out the glare of day. Night was the period of quiet; when the shades of evening fell, and darkness came upon the world we rested from light. Yet there were songs and brightness in night which rivaled that of day. A devout mind could not observe the firmament studded with stars, or behold the moon leading a silver trail through the Heavens, without holy thoughts and emotions of reverence for the Being who created all. Night was the time for serious reflections, the hour of prayer and praise.

II. There was a night vocal with song in the moral world. God, in the beginning, created man in his own image, and he came into the world a being free from sin. The morning stars sung together, and a blessed light shone through Paradise. But the first temptation was yielded to, the forbidden fruit was tasted, and the night that followed cast the world into a deep gloom.

"Earth felt the wound, and Nature,
Sighing from her cast, gave sounds
Of woe that all was lost."

Superstition, Heathen tradition and idolatry prevailed throughout the world. Yet were there "songs in the night" in that dark age of the world. It was decreed that woman should bruise the head of the serpent; the harps of the prophets sounded forth predictions of the coming of the Saviour. At length, after 4,000 years of gloom, their prophecies were verified, and then the glorious declarations of His coming were made, and the world rejoiced. His doctrines spread, Christianity gained ground, anthems of praise arose, and in these days "songs in the night" were still heard. The Reformation, the good work of missions to the lands of benighted heathen, were steps in advance towards that future for the consummation of the Christian's hopes when glad tidings of the second coming shall be reechoed through the world, and glory and praise be awarded to Him who from his high and holy place should proclaim everlasting peace.

III. The night of spiritual declension was not without its songs in the night. When the sinner was sinking backwards into immorality, becoming the slave of appetite and sense, and forgetting the high purposes for which he was created—when around his soul gathered the shades of a dark night which, like that of the Polar regions, lingered long amid snow and ice, where all was barren and unproductive, where no seeds of good fruit were planted, and no buds were bursting forth, still there was the consoling thought that the darkest period was that just before day-break, and that out of error truth often sprung.

IV. There were songs in the night of personal spiritual despondency. Many perplexities of spirit were to be borne in this world; desponding thoughts often came, trials and adversity were our lot here, but still in the midst of all the true Christian was happy.

V. "Gracious God giveth songs in the night of affliction." When our earthly hopes were disappointed and our ambitious frustrated, Religion gave us the power of endurance and taught us even then to sing hymns of praise to the Almighty who chastens us for our own good. Zenocrates had related of Plato that a bird flew into his bosom and he fostered and protected it. So if we would fly to God and repose our griefs in His bosom in the hour of tribulation, He would care for and protect us.

VI. There were songs in the dark night of the grave. Mortality was the lot of man. The stem withered, the bud was blighted, the leaves scattered and dry. "Man giveth up the ghost and where is he?" Generations and empires lived and passed away and were forgotten. Where was God in this dismal night of the grave? Life was an inexplicable mystery if man's career must end in the clod. It was the law of Nature that night should be succeeded by day. God promised to overcome death, and beyond the grave man would live immortal, and sing anthems of praise to his Maker. This was a sombre subject for a Thanksgiving sermon, continued the minister, but was it not appropriate to this season of distress and gloom? Yet there was everything to be thankful for. With a few days of turbulence we had had years of peace, with a brief period of scarcity we had had years of plenty to the poor, and pampered luxury for the rich.

REV. DR. STORRS—CLIMATOLOGY.

Rev. Dr. STORRS preached a sermon in which he showed the effects of climate upon man, physically and intellectually. He took for a text the 16th and 17th verses of the 74th Psalm—"The day is thine, the night also is thine: Thou hast prepared the light and the sun. Thou hast set all the borders of the earth: Thou hast made Summer and Winter."

He said it was possible that if we looked back for three or four months we might not discover much for which to be thankful. Within that time the accumulations of years had disappeared; enterprise had received a blow from which it had not yet recovered; business had been prostrated, and the country had suffered severely. And yet it was remarkable that amid the general crash, the general business ruin, the people retained their natural buoyancy—were never more cheerful than now. It was of the cause of their buoyancy—of their vivacity, that he intended to speak. He believed it to be mainly if not altogether owing to the peculiar character of the climate in which we lived. That might be considered by some an insufficient cause to assign for it, but in proof of its power, he instanced the peculiarities of the human race in the hot, in the cold and in the temperate climes. In the first the people were dreamy and indolent, in the second stolid and stunted, but in the third they were robust and vigorous. Doubtless all had noticed in our own country, the enervating influences of a warm, sultry day, and the invigorating influences of a clear, buoyant atmosphere; and if they would but give the subject a thought, they would find that for some time past we had enjoyed a peculiarly healthful atmosphere. The sky had been clear and the air pure; and that he assigned as the cause of the excellent spirits of the people throughout this time of wreck and ruin. His discourse was elaborate; evincing extensive and careful gathering of authentic information in relation to the peculiarities of climate in the various countries of the world, and the characteristics of the people residing in them.

THE FINANCIAL PANIC ABROAD.

THE PANIC IN ENGLAND AND THE SUSPENSION OF THE BANK CHARTER ACT.

From the London Times, (City Article), Nov. 18.

This has been the most anxious day in the city since the height of the panic in 1847.

The first disaster announced was the stoppage of another Scotch establishment—the City of Glasgow Bank, with a capital of £1,000,000, a reserved fund of $90,000, and 26 branches.

This was followed by the suspension of the London discount-house of Messrs. SANDERSON, BOWDEN & Co., with liabilities for three or three and a half millions, believed, however, to be almost secured by commercial bills and the property of the firm.

The telegraphic accounts from Glasgow during the morning described a continuance of the run which commenced yesterday on the various banks, and nearly £600,000 sovereigns in addition to the 300,000 dispatched last evening have been sent from the Bank of England to meet the demand. It was stated also that a military force had been found necessary at Glasgow to preserve order.

The drain of gold to Scotland at the rate of more than a million in two days continuance, of course, a most serious addition to the pressure in London. It must have its limits, however, and these can be clearly traced. The authorized note issues of Scotland amount to £3,087,339. Beyond that total not a note can be put out, except against gold.

The English funds opened this morning at the advanced quotations attained yesterday after regular hours, but the market presented an uncertain appearance, and subsequently experienced various fluctuations. The first quotation of Consols for money was 89¼@89⅝, from which on the publication of the news by the India Mail there was a further improvement to 89⅞@90. The stoppage of the City of Glasgow Bank then caused a reduction to 89¼, from which there was a tendency to a new rebound, when the suspension of Messrs. Sanderson & Co. transpired, and produced a further sudden depression, the final transactions being at 88¼@88⅜. For the 7th of December the last price was 89@89¼. During the morning loans on Government securities were offered at 2 p. c. cent, but it was afterwards difficult to obtain them at a higher rate. The agents of the Scotch Banks were active in taking all that could be had. During the day two failures were announced in the Stock Exchange, but they were of insignificant amount. Bank Stock left off at 209@211; Reduced, 87¼@87⅞; New Three Per Cents., 87¼@87⅞; India Stock, 210@213; India Bonds, 50s.@60s. discount; and Exchequer bills, 25s.@20s. discount.

In the course of the afternoon a report was circulated that the Australian mail steamer Emeu had arrived at Suez with nearly a million of gold. The actual sum is £536,000, and this opportune amount may be expected to reach Southampton by the Australasian on the 16th or 18th inst.

The transactions in foreign stocks in some cases show greater depression, but business has generally been of an unimportant character.

The applications at the Bank to-day for discount were again extraordinarily numerous, but this feature loses much of its importance from the circumstance that it is chiefly from parties overcapitalizing themselves.

The whole history of our situation is plain. For years past certain provincial joint-stock banks have gambled to an incredible amount by means of what are termed re-discounts—that is, with a limited capital they have granted accommodation to an almost unlimited extent, selling the larger proportion of the bills thus negotiated to the discount establishments in London, who, in turn, discount them for the joint-stock bank on the strength chiefly of the indorsement of such bank, and not upon any careful estimate of the drawers or acceptors, or the legitimate character of the transactions they represent. "Of course we are safe with the indorsement of the Liverpool Borough Bank" is the cry. "The character of its business may be doubtful, but its shareholders are all liable to their last farthing." Again, "Why should we hesitate with the Western Bank of Scotland? Among its proprietors are two or three names which are alone good for as many millions." But how is the money obtained which is thus freely granted by the London houses? The security relied upon is the ultimate responsibility of a certain number of shareholders scattered over a large district, and which, so far from having anything in common with a sound banking security, is wholly unavailable in emergencies, and can never be realized except through protracted legal processes; but the money advanced consists of deposits lodged for the [illegible] last part of call with the discount houses, or at [illegible] with the joint-[illegible] of trouble, has led to the same results. The London money-dealers cannot [illegible] but they are [illegible] consequences develop themselves, and then to seek safety by cutting off "facilities" and throwing the responsibility upon the Bank of England. Thus we have deputations to the Governors, threats that if something is not done the whole trade of the country will be brought to a stand, and an appeal, of course successful after the requisite [illegible] has been caused, for the suspension of the Bank Charter Act. If, however, the example of 1847 had never been set, and these persons had been straight to feel that, happen what might, the laws of the country—in the full knowledge of which they had undertaken all their operations—would be rigidly kept [illegible] not only would the public never have [illegible] every safeguard that ingenuity could devise would have been speedily prepared, to provide for any [illegible] If the discount houses and any of the joint-stock banks apprehended a withdrawal of their deposits to an extent to cause public inconvenience, [illegible] comes to guarantee each other's safety, and, if any actual or contingent suspension were necessary, to bear the responsibility of it themselves, and not to inflict it on the Bank of England and the country. They could have announced to the public that a [illegible] threatened they had combined to [illegible] its consequences; that not being able to [illegible] its possible extent, they had agreed to suspend for the moment any return of deposits, and that to meet the difficulty they would issue their promissory notes, at three months, bearing [illegible] per cent. interest, and secured by their common liability. A meeting of all the principal bankers and merchants, including the Governor and Directors of the Bank of England, might have expressed approval of the wisdom of their scheme, and before a few weeks had passed these notes would have been at a premium. But, unquestionably, the character of the issuers would have been damaged, since the fact of their having been obliged to resort to such a method would have placed them in their right position in relation to the causes that had led to it. If any character was to be damaged, it was much more pleasant that it should be that of the Bank of England, the country, and the Government, and, thanks to the forbearance of the latter, they have succeeded in placing it on that footing. To be sure they took care that matters should go to a point at which the Cabinet would have little choice. There was, however, an alternative which, although equally unjust, in being an act of Government relief for which there was no true claim, would still have prevented a sacrifice of principle. An issue of one-pound notes could have been adopted without any infringement of the doctrines on which the Bank Charter Act is grounded. The fact that the permission for the circulation of such notes terminated in 1829 is not material, as the law could have been set aside on one point as easily as on another. This plan, however, seems not even to have been considered. After ten years' experience, therefore, and all the enlightenment that was thought to have been attained, we have been thrown back at once to the discreditable position we occupied in the last crisis, and all the admirable conduct of the Bank of England and of the respectable mercantile public has been rewarded by a premonition to every speculator or reckless money-lender who may choose to disregard the [illegible] of monetary science, that he will always find his safety in the very panic which his own misconduct has promoted, and that the only persons who will be brought to disappointment or vexatious will be those who have prudently guided themselves by the law, and have relied throughout upon its inviolability.

Annexed is the circular issued by Messrs. SANDERSON, SANDEMAN & Co., announcing the necessity for their suspension. The liabilities of the houses in question, by whom bills are held as security, are stated as to borrowers three millions and three millions and a half, while those to other parties may be about £200,000. The great majority of the bills held being perfectly good, and such as would be discounted by the Bank of England, the suspension will not, in these cases, suffer any inconvenience, and the effects of the stoppage will, therefore, be very limited when compared with the magnitude of the transactions. A few years ago the houses suspended during the crisis which then raged, and in less than five months it resumed business, Mr. SANDEMAN being admitted as a partner. An equally favorable result is confidently hoped for on the present occasion. The principal difficulties of the firm have arisen from the failure of the Liverpool Borough Bank and Dennistoun & Co., but from, neither of these quarters can any ultimate deficiency be much apprehended.

[illegible] WHITE-HALL-YARD, Nov. 11.

DEAR SIRS: We have to announce to you that our house, under the necessity of suspending business—an event which was wholly unforeseen and unprovided for by us.

The pressure of the times and the recent lamented death of our senior partner, Mr. SANDERSON, have left us no alternative but to take this step, which we trust will be but temporary. The accounts are being made up with all dispatch, and in a few days they will be in a state to be submitted to those interested.

We are, &c.,
SANDERSON, SANDEMAN & CO.

Many merchants, in order to gratify an ignorant impulse of caution, have now at their bankers' two or three times the amount they ordinarily keep. The reason they give is they "do not know what may happen." They might know, if they would take the trouble to reason, that the foreign drain having been almost wholly checked, there can be no increased demand for money, except such as may be occasioned by their own fears and by any temporary contingency, like the Scotch panic; that under such circumstances, whatever is taken from the Bank must always within a few days return to it; and that under any circumstances the Bank will continue to afford at the fair market price every accommodation it would ever have granted even in the calmest times.

From the London Times (City Article) Nov. 13.

The Bank Charter Act is abrogated. Its fate at the second time of trial has been the same as at the first. The English Government have resorted to the notification that the Bank are authorized to extend their loan on approved securities, without regard to the amount of bullion in their vaults, at a rate of not less than 10 per cent.

Although the announcement will give immense relief from fears which were rapidly spreading, there can scarcely be an Englishman who will not receive it with deep regret from the humiliation it involves. It must have resulted from one of two causes—either blind fright or an inherently unhealthy condition of business, which prevented our merchants from sustaining themselves against a rate of discount such as is borne at Paris, Hamburg, and a number of other centres of commerce.

In either case the conclusion is equally lowering to our fame as a mercantile nation. It is satisfactory to believe that the measure was neither asked for nor recommended by the Directors of the Bank of England, or any delegated representatives of the leading mercantile or banking firms. At the same time, in justice to the Government it must be admitted that the period had obviously arrived for some decisive steps of some kind had become absolutely necessary.

The resuscitation of the Bank of England and the private banks will give more of higher confidence, but the [illegible] were evident on all sides that a wide spread panic from the discount houses and joint stock banks might commence at any instant and totally cripple their power to continue further accommodation; thus the Bank of England, from the path in which their reserve has been brought by the sweeping away of nearly two millions of gold for Ireland and Scotland, could in exchange find no adequate help and consequently that if a repetition panic was let to be considered as having largely commenced, we were in a position in which no one could calculate on its being [illegible] for a single hour.

[illegible] remedies available other than that of [illegible] the law—for a law which has been suspended on each occasion of trial which [illegible] not been destroyed. The state to which [illegible] Government or of the community at large [illegible] for those who had occasioned it to [illegible] own means of extrication. They did not look about for these means, because they knew they could obtain relief elsewhere. If this confidence had not existed them they would long before this [illegible] have concerted measures of defence.

The English funds opened this morning with an unusual appearance, although the announcement of £260,000 of Australian gold by the Avon, in addition to the £578,000 expected by the Australasian, produced a favorable effect. Consols for money, which left off yesterday at 89¾@⅞, were first quoted nominally 89@89, but the brokers who act for the principal banks were large sellers of stock, and the dealers, from the scarcity of money, being independent sellers, a fall took place to 88¾. A [illegible] calculated that a Government [illegible] to enable [illegible] letter relaxing the operation of the Bank Charter Act would soon appear, and a number of heavy speculative purchases having been made, a fall ensued to 89. Sales, however, were renewed, and it is estimated that the whole amount of stock thrown upon the market during the day was at least £600,000 or £700,000.

Under these influences the price again receded to 88¼@⅜, but at 9 the Bank broker announced the letter from the Treasury, and there was an immediate advance to 88⅞@89¼. The current difference between the price of Consols for money and account was 1 ⅜ cent., and some of the principal dealers gave at the rate of 16 ⅜ cent. for loans till December.

After another hour there was a further improvement, and bargains were effected at 89¼ for money and 89½ for the account. Bank Stock left off at 209@211; Reduced, 87⅞@⅞; New Three per Cents, 87⅞@88; India Stock, 210@213; and India Bonds, 60s.@40s. discount. Exchequer bills experienced a great fall, and left off at 40s.@25s. discount.

At the Bank the applications for discount were enormous. In fact, to-day and yesterday the pressure was heavier than at any time in 1847. To add to it, the country banks were drawing notes largely as a measure of precaution.

The Government letter to the Bank does not specify what is included under the head of approved securities besides commercial bills. It is thought that Exchequer bills will be received but not stock, as for the latter there is always a ready market to any amount.

The final quotations of the French Threes ⅜ Cents. on the Paris Bourse this evening were 66f. 55c. for money, and 66f. 60c. for the end of the month, showing a decline of an eighth.

The following letter was addressed yesterday afternoon to the Governors of the Bank of England:

DOWNING-STREET, Thursday, Nov. 12.

GENTLEMEN: Her Majesty's Government have observed with great concern the serious consequences which have ensued from the recent joint-stock bank in England and Scotland, as well as of certain large mercantile firms, chiefly connected with the American trade.

The discredit and distrust which have resulted from these events, and a withdrawal of a large amount of the paper circulation authorized by the existing Bank Acts, appear to Her Majesty's Government to render it necessary for them to inform the Bank of England that if they should be unable in the present emergency to meet the demands for discounts and advances upon approved securities without exceeding the limits of their circulation prescribed by the Act of 1844, the Government will be prepared to propose to Parliament upon its meeting a Bill of Indemnity for any excess so issued.

In order to prevent this temporary relaxation of the law being extended beyond the actual necessities of the occasion, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the Bank terms of discount should not be reduced below their present rate.

Her Majesty's Government reserve for future consideration the appropriation of any profit which may arise upon issues in excess of the statutory amount.

Her Majesty's Government are fully impressed with the importance of maintaining the letter of the law, even in a time of considerable mercantile difficulty, but they believe that for the removal of apprehensions which have checked the course of monetary transactions such a measure as is now contemplated has become necessary, and they rely upon the discretion and prudence of the Directors for confining its operation within the strict limits of the exigencies of the case. We have, &c., PALMERSTON,
G. C. LEWIS.

To the Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England."

From the London Times, (Leading Article,) Nov. 13.

At a late hour yesterday afternoon the commercial public received the news that the Bank Charter Act had been suspended. The Bank is thus allowed by Government to issue an excess of notes not defined in value, and a promise is given that a Bill of Indemnity will be introduced in the next session of Parliament to free the Bank from the consequences of its conduct, should it be necessary to take advantage of the permission of Government. On the merits of this step we will say but little. It may be consistent with the maxims of political economy to regulate the issue of notes during ordinary times, and thus to check rash speculation and the embarkation in business of men destitute of capital, while when an actual dearth of money prevails the chief banking institution of the country may be allowed to extend its issue of notes under a public guarantee. But if such is to be the principle of our monetary system, the sooner it is embodied into a law the better. If the Bank is to exceed its legal issue of notes as often as the rate of discount is necessarily raised above a certain point, then an act of Parliament should establish the practice on sound and intelligible principles. The commercial interests of the country should not be subjected to a system by which a law is obeyed as long as obedience is easy, and temporarily swept away as often as pressure or panic supervenes. The houses which, in 1847 and in 1857, have stopped payment before the relaxation of the law may well complain that, while they have been crushed by the operation of the Bank Charter Act, others not more solvent or of higher standing than themselves have been saved by the suspension of it. Whether the Bank avails itself of the privilege accorded to it or not, the invasion of the law is the same, and those who, trusting to its inviolability, prudently suspended their payments, now find themselves placed at a disadvantage in respect to those whom boldness or good fortune encouraged to hold on a day or two longer.

We can well imagine that only the representation that great commercial calamities were about to take place has determined the Government to act so bold a part. How much they feel the importance of the step is proved by what we have now to announce—that it has been resolved to call Parliament together at once, in order to settle the questions raised by the present crisis, and to register for Ministers and the Bank Directors that indemnity for which they are obliged to appeal. A Council will, we understand, be held next Monday, at which, probably, Parliament will be summoned to meet at the end of 14 days.

We may certainly prepare ourselves for a violent attack on the English monetary system as established by the Bank Act of 1844. All the theorists of all the schools of currency will be ready to pounce on what seems the carcass of a dead law. And, indeed, they will have much that is plausible, and not a little that is true on their side. The law is a fair weather law, a law for times of steady trading and easy credit; its provisions are like the pasteboard defences of the Chinese—strong to look at, painted with heavy masses of stone and guns of enormous power, but in reality a weakness and a sham. Such will be the reasoning of the partisans of inconvertible paper or uncontrolled banks. The defender of the existing system will, on the other hand, have to face the fact that the Act has been twice suspended in two successive panics. What better proof, it would seem, that the law does not provide for that very condition of things its expectation of which it was framed? At this moment, when the pressure seems about to cease, when the Indian mutiny is broken and the American disasters drawing to a close, we have the Act which has been so often debated, so skilfully defended, so unhesitatingly supported by commercial men of all parties, which committees have declared perfect and the House of Commons sanctioned again and again, now for the second time set aside by the Government at the earnest supplication of the business community. Yet as to the retention of the present law we have not the slightest doubt. Its the ought supporters say that is perfect for all time and all circumstances, and that its present suspension is a weakness on the part of Government, generated by an insane panic on the part of the people. But even those who admit that a time may come when the Bank should be allowed to extend its issue may still uphold the Bank Charter Act as the general law of the land. They may fairly argue that the suspension allowed by the Government yesterday was to save the country from returning to a state of barter. Gold is the measure of values, and, as long as it bears a sufficient relation to the transactions of the country, men may be required to make their payments in it or in notes immediately convertible. But if from any sudden convulsion the metal falls short, is drawn away, and exhausted at any spot, it cannot be expected that all the business at that spot is at once to cease. There remains money's worth—land and houses, cotton and sugar, wines and tobacco. All that is wanted is to be able to express these in the currency which is the general standard of value. Gold has vanished, but the country has the material wealth which will bring it back again. All is a question of a few months, perhaps of a few weeks. It may in such a case be allowed to the Government to come to the rescue of the nation, by allowing a corporation which has a quasi national character, and is ruled by nationally imposed laws, to create fictitious standards of value, in the shape of bank-notes which have no metallic representatives. Such a proceeding, however, must be understood to be an extraordinary proceeding, in which the community for its own good allows a certain establishment to exceed the limits of safe and legitimate dealing. In fact the country must be considered as becoming security for the redemption of the extended issue, or, in other words, as itself issuing a quantity of paper money by its agent, the Bank, in order that the business of the country may be conducted during the temporary abstraction of the usual currency.

It is, therefore, no proof of the failure of the Bank Act that at certain times its restrictions should be suspended. In fact, this extension of issue should be considered as something superadded to the ordinary conditions of the Bank's existence. The act of 1844 was passed to control the Bank, not to control the nation. Parliament decided, and we think wisely, that it would not, in ordinary times, trust the great corporation with the power of issuing an unlimited number of notes. This proceeding is strictly in accordance with the regulations which control the issues of country banks, and which restrain London banks from having any issue at all. Whether the amount of surplus allowed to the Bank be sufficient for the ordinary purposes of commerce is, of course, a question for discussion, but the principle which establishes a restriction of some kind has been accepted by the nation as its general course of legislation. It still, however, may be competent to the country to remedy any abnormal deficiency of the currency by an extraordinary issue, which the Bank may be empowered to make, not as it were on its own account, but on account of the nation, which may regulate the amount issued and dispose of whatever profits may accrue by the transaction. This seems to us to be the defence for such an interference of the Government as has just taken place. The suspension of the Bank Act has nothing akin to the system which allows American establishments to flood the country with paper representing only a small percentage of capital, or perhaps no capital at all. It is the extraordinary device rendered necessary by an extraordinary conjuncture, and when the necessity ceases the relaxation may cease too. Still the suspension of a positive law is a grave matter, and may well necessitate a speedy appeal to Parliament.

THE EFFECT ON THE MARKETS.

From the London Times, (City Article,) Nov. 14.

The condition of the various markets to-day has shown a considerable resumption of steadiness, although there has been no tendency to great confidence or rapid revival. With the return of gold from Scotland, which may speedily be expected to commence, and the delivery of the large amounts announced from Australia, there can scarcely fail, however, to be a decided improvement, and an impression is entertained that the Bank Charter Act, which had not been practically overstepped up to last evening, may still, as in 1847, be kept free from actual infringement. Consols for money, which left off last evening at 89¾, were first quoted 89⅞@⅞.

At the Bank of England to-day the applications for discount, although far beyond the average amount even of the busiest times, were altogether moderate as compared with those of the two preceding days. In the open market the best bills were negotiable at 10¼ per cent. in the morning, and at a late hour transactions might possibly have been effected at the Bank minimum.

It was announced on Wednesday morning that the Bank of France have adopted new rates of discount in place of the 7½ ⅜ cent fixed on the 20th of October. Henceforth the charges are to be 8 ⅜ cent. for bills not having more than 30 days to run, 9 ⅜ cent. for those under 60 days, and 10 ⅜ cent. for those between 60 and 90 days. A decree is shortly expected to modify the law of 1807, which prevents bankers and traders generally from charging more than 6 ⅜ cent.

The suspension was announced of Messrs. BOWMAN, GRINNELL & Co., of Liverpool, engaged in the New-York trade. It is stated that it will be only temporary, and that it has arisen from a sudden lock-up of a considerable sum in the Borough Bank, where they had kept their account, the impossibility of selling any description of produce, and disappointment in money remittances from the United States. The liabilities are not large, and are understood to be wholly upon bills of exchange drawn in New-York. Mr. GRINNELL, one of the partners, lately sailed for that city to hasten home funds, and an assurance is expressed that when the acceptances are returned there with the protest they will be promptly provided for.

Messrs. R. RAINBRIDGE & Co., in the American trade, have also stopped, but their liabilities on this side are thought not to exceed £30,000 or £40,000. Subjoined is their circular:

No. 14 SEW-LANE, Nov. 12.

SIR: It is our painful duty to inform you that, in consequence of the suspension of Messrs. DENNISTOUN & Co., whose bills we have taken to a large amount, and of the inability of our house in New-York to make remittances at the present time, we are under the necessity of suspending business.

We beg further to inform you that our books have been placed in the hands of Mr. JAY, the accountant, who will immediately commence his investigation. He will be prepared with the result on Wednesday, the 18th inst., when the opinion of a meeting of the creditors will be taken upon the best course to be adopted for the realization of our assets in the United States and the payment of our engagements.

We are, &c.,
R. RAINBRIDGE & CO.

The suspension of MUNRO, GRANT & Co., timber merchants, at Swansea, and of STEEGMAN & Co., manufacturers, at Nottingham, is mentioned in letters from those places.

A rumor was strongly circulated to-day from Glasgow, that an attempt is in progress to resuscitate the Western Bank of Scotland, that a million has been subscribed for the purpose, and that it will probably reopen on Monday. Many persons doubt the statement, from the fact that a million seems an inadequate sum for the demands that would have to be encountered. A similar arrangement is also alleged to be contemplated with regard to the City of Glasgow Bank.

The following, from Messrs. FITCH & SKEET, whose stoppage was mentioned yesterday, explains an ambiguity in the wording of their circular:

No. 22 ROOD-LANE, Nov. 13.

SIR: In reference to our circular, issued yesterday, we beg to say Messrs. SANDERSON, SANDEMAN & Co. discounted our bills and placed the proceeds to our credit, of which in a few days after, we took a small moiety, and did not make further application until the day of their suspension.

Our surplus, as shown at the meeting of creditors, was £17,000 over and above all liabilities.

Yours obediently,
FITCH & SKEET.

In the produce markets during the week business has been almost suspended, and prices are again generally lower. The raising of the Bank rate of interest to 10 per cent. on Monday, together with the numerous announcements of failures, tended to increase the feeling of uneasiness noticed in the last weekly report, but to-day there appeared to be less disposition to force sales. The business in sugar has been upon a very limited scale, at 1s.@2s. decline. Consumers are now quite bare of stock, and this morning there were symptoms of a revival in the demand. Further supplies have arrived from the United States. In coffee, colony plantation Ceylon has receded 2s.@3s., but the market now presents a firmer appearance. Native is almost neglected. Scarcely any business has taken place in tea. A public sale of about 700 packages, "without reserve," attracted some attention, and the trade purchased at fair prices. Ultimately there was a rather better feeling in the market, and several parcels that were offering have been withdrawn. Common congou is more inquired after. Cocoa has experienced a decline of about 2s.@3s. A Government contract for 100 tons is declared for the 17th inst. Its rice the few transactions reported have been at slightly lower prices, and the market, although 3s. 6d. per cwt. below the late highest point, is still inactive. Saltpetre has been purchased only to a very moderate extent, at about 2s.@3s. under previous quotations.

From the London News, (City Article,) Nov. 14.

The Government Letter, authorizing a suspension of the provisions of the Bank Charter Act, has led to a decidedly improved tone in every department of business. The community have been startled at finding how narrowly they have escaped a gigantic panic, and it may be some days yet before affairs will subside into a really settled state. Thus far, however, the effect has been most satisfactory; indeed, considering the alarm and gloom which prevailed everywhere yesterday, an [illegible] change may be said to have taken place. Of course, no one expects that the facilities just extended by Government will either precipitate a decline in the value of money, or prevent the fall of embarrassed houses; but every one is perfectly satisfied, at finding that the incipient panic has been stayed. The letters received to-day from the country indicate an extent of monetary disturbance and commercial excitement almost if not altogether unparalleled, and it is fearful to contemplate the ruin which would have resulted from the postponement of the expected relief for even one or two days. To-day, money circulated much more freely in the discount market, and, in consequence, there was witnessed the expected and satisfactory circumstance of a decided diminution in the demand at the Bank of England. The applications at that establishment to-day were still very heavy, it is true; but, from all that we can gather, we believe they were not by any means equal to half of those witnessed yesterday when, as before stated, the demand was perfectly unprecedented. Considering the prospect of a gradual subsidence of the demand, which will be promoted by the increased disposition to lend observable in the open market, a strong impression prevails in quarters usually well informed that the Bank Charter Act will not be actually infringed. In this case, of course, Ministers will have no occasion to present a bill of indemnity to Parliament. As it is positively alleged, however, that Parliament is to be speedily convened, the suspicion is expressed in many quarters that other financial considerations may have something to do with the step.

The funds opened this morning with great buoyancy, at a fresh rise of ⅛ per cent, and from the eagerness to purchase which was at first evinced, a further advance seemed probable. A decided alteration, however, was occasioned by the appearance of sellers of stock to a very large amount for immediate delivery. These sales were attributed to a joint-stock bank. It is computed that, altogether, stock to the amount of from £600,000 to £900,000 was to-day passed upon the market. The result was a fall of ⅛ per cent. from the first prices of the morning, and the funds finally closed ¼ to ⅜ per cent. lower than yesterday. The increased strength of the market, however, is proved by the fact that so large an amount of stock was so readily absorbed; yesterday no progress could be made with sales of stock for cash. The statement that Parliament is to be called together on financial grounds tended to discourage buyers, and the anticipation of an extraordinarily unfavorable Bank return operated in the same direction.

Nearly every other department of the Stock Exchange were a decidedly improved appearance. In English railway shares the rise this morning was even feverish, and, therefore, met with a rather decided check later in the day.

Exchequer Bills, which yesterday fell to 40s. discount, were sold this morning as low as 30s. discount, but had recovered at the close to 23s. to 18s. discount.

In the Stock Exchange to-day, notwithstanding the magnitude of the recent sales of stock, money was decidedly easier than yesterday.

At Paris to-day, the Three per Cent. Rentes declined ¼ to ½ per cent., closing at 66.35 for money, and 66.50 for the end of November.

In every other continental stock market yesterday, a considerable fall took place in the prices of securities, owing to the gloomy advices transmitted from London.

Consols, which were quoted at 4 o'clock yesterday 90@⅞ for the 7th of December, opened this morning at 90⅛@⅞, and thence gradually receded, closing at 89⅞, or 89 11-16@13-16. For money the last price was 89⅞. After 4 o'clock stock was offered at 89⅞ for the account. The official business report is as follows: Three ⅜ Cent. Consols, for money, 89⅞, ⅞, ⅞, ⅞, ⅞, ⅞, 89, 89⅞, 89⅞; ditto, for account, (Dec. 7,) 90⅛, 89⅞; Three ⅜ Cents. Reduced, 88⅞, ⅞, ⅞, ⅞; New Three ⅜ Cents., 88⅞, ⅞, ⅞; Thirty Years' Annuities, expiring in April, 1865, 17¼; Bank Stock, 209¼; Three-and-a-Half ⅜ Cent. Exchequer Bonds, falling payable in 1858, 98¼, 97¾; ditto, 1859, 97¼, 97, 97⅛, 97¼.

Great regret was expressed to-day at the announcement of the stoppage of the well known and respected firm of Messrs. DRAPER, PIETRONI & Co., of this city, largely engaged in the Italian and Mediterranean trade. The liabilities of the house are estimated at about £350,000; but, as a considerable amount of their acceptances against credits will be withdrawn, the ultimate engagements will be much reduced. Great sympathy is, on all sides, expressed for the partners. Subjoined is a copy of the circular issued:

81 LONDON-WALL, E. C., LONDON, Nov. 12, 1857.

Our connection with the Transatlantic Steam Navigation Company of Genoa having very much embarrassed the financial position of our general business, and that Company seeking at this time to press us to an unfair settlement, the effect of which might prove injurious to our creditors generally, we have (however painful at this moment) determined on suspending our payments, feeling assured that by this step and the forbearance of those parties who may be interested in the realization of our assets, we shall (although we may cause temporary inconvenience to our correspondents) be enabled to discharge all our obligations. We have availed ourselves of the assistance of Messrs. J. E. COLEMAN & Co., and have requested them to place the statement of our affairs before you with as little delay as possible. We are, yours faithfully, DRAPER, PIETRONI & CO.

The Bombay letters are expected to be delivered in London to-morrow, and the Calcutta and Chinese mails on Monday.

The steamer North Star has just arrived from New-York. According to a telegram received in London this afternoon, the money market continues to exhibit a gradual recovery, and a better feeling prevailed. It is mentioned that Messrs. WINSLOW, LANIER & Co. have resumed payment.

The foreign exchanges this afternoon were firm at the recent important advance, with the single exception of Hamburg. The rates for paper on Antwerp, and for long bills on Paris, were quoted higher. The Austrian exchanges have again risen, owing to the distrust which prevails in Vienna. The current quotations are shown below, viz:

Amsterdam, three months, 12.1½ to 2; do., short, 11.17 to 18; Rotterdam, three months, 12.1½ to 2½; Antwerp, three months, 25.80 to 5; Hamburg M's Banco, three months, 13.12 to 13; Paris, three days' sight, 25.30 to 45; do., three months, 26.0 to 26.15; Frankfort-on-the-Maine, three months, 121 to 122; Petersburg, per rouble, three months, 33½ to 34; Vienna, eff. fl., three months, 10.55 to 11.5; Trieste, do., three months, 10.55 to 11.5; Madrid, three months, 47½ to 48; Cadiz, three months, 48½ to ¾; Leghorn, three months, 30.60 to 5; Genoa, three months, 26.5 to 26.10; Naples, three months, 41½ to 42; Palermo, three months, 125 to 126; Messina, three months, 125 to 126; Lisbon, 90 days, 51½ to 52; Oporto, 90 days, 52½ to ½.

FAILURES OF BRAND & CO. AND GARNER.

From the London Times, Nov. 12.

A meeting was held, to-day, of creditors of Messrs. W. & H. BRAND & Co., merchants, whose suspension was announced on the 26th ult., when the following statement of affairs was submitted by Mr. JAY, the accountant:

WILLIAM BRAND and ROBERT THOMPSON BRAND, trading under the firm of WILLIAM & HENRY BRAND & Co., No. 109 Fenchurch-street.

By the above account the liabilities exceeding creditors under £20, appear to be £235,524, of which £139,577 is on account of acceptances of Messrs. DENNISTOUN & Co., the Western Bank of Scotland, and the Glasgow City Bank. Should these claims come against the estate the dividend will be about 2s. 6d. in the pound but it is hoped they will be [illegible] which case it will be about 6s. 8d. The immediate cause of the failure has been the suspension of Mr. GARNER, the American correspondent of the firm, for whom Messrs. BRAND have accepted to the amount of nearly £56,000. The cash is here set down at £40 only, but, in addition to this, there is a balance of £2,900 attached by the bankers. In answer to a question, Mr. JAY stated that the transactions with Mr. GARNER could not be considered in the light of accommodation bills, but were simply in the regular course of business, and partook more of the nature of an open credit. After a short discussion it was resolved to wind up the estate under a deed of supervision, and a Committee of three creditors was appointed for that purpose.

BANK OF ENGLAND RETURNS.

From the London News, Nov. 14.

The return of the Bank of England for the week ending Wednesday, Nov. 11, compared with the previous weekly return, shows the following results:

Circulation issue	£21,141,085 Dec	£1,400,000
Circulation active	26,162,195 Dec	98,245
Public capital	3,814,538 Inc	42,718
Other deposits	12,095,264 Inc	1,324,674
Government securities in banking department	6,444,606 Dec	675,276
Other securities in banking department	28,119,488 Inc	2,460,562
Coin and bullion in both departments	7,170,508 Dec	1,827,272
Seven day and other bills	333,678 Inc	20,676
The rest	2,304,350 Inc	52,777
Notes in reserve	957,710 Dec	1,197,605

Scarcely at any former period has the Bank returns presented such extraordinary changes. The increase in the "other securities" is nearly three millions and a half, yet, as the new deposits amounted to nearly a million and a half, and as the Bank sold stock or other securities to the amount of £675,276, the decrease in the reserve of notes does not exceed £1,197,605. The total amount of notes held, however, was thus reduced to the petty sum of £957,710. The addition to the other deposits shows how largely the borrowers of money at the Bank were influenced by more alarm. The £1,827,272 of coin withdrawn was almost entirely dispatched to Scotland, and will, of course, ere long, return. The total metallic stock is now reduced to little more than seven millions sterling.

From the London Times, Nov. 14.

The amount of notes in circulation is £20,183,355, being a decrease of £83,390; and the stock of bullion in both departments is £7,170,508, showing a decrease of £1,827,272 when compared with the preceding return.

The extreme pressure which has prevailed in the money-market is indicated by the unprecedented increase of £3,485,202 in the private securities, while the extent to which the amounts thus drawn out have found their way back to the Bank is shown by the increase of £442,715 and £1,024,874 in the public and private deposits respectively. Sales of stock appear to have been made to the extent of £675,276, and the reserve of notes has been reduced by £1,197,605. The present reserve is £219,690 less than the lowest point to which it fell in the panic of 1847, and the stock of bullion is now £1,142,163 less than at that period.

THE MANUFACTURING TOWNS AND THE SUSPENSION OF THE BANK CHARTER ACT.

From the London Times, Nov. 12.

According to the trade advices from Manchester the invitation addressed to that city to join in the Glasgow demonstration against the Bank Charter Act has been DECLINED. At the same time the Leeds Mercury intimates that the Liverpool financiers have either drawn back or for the sake of expediency been excluded, and the entire movement may therefore be considered a failure. The Glasgow deputation was to consist of persons chiefly known from connexion with the Western Bank of Scotland, and the published list contained the name of a partner in one of the firms to whom the reckless advances are alleged to have been made which precipitated the ruin of that establishment. An attack upon our currency system, from the representatives of a concern which, with eight millions of British capital intrusted to its care, has brought itself to bankruptcy by fostering a set of fraudulent traders to the damage of all legitimate merchants, is scarcely an event to injure that system in the eyes of the public. It is from sources such as these that the organized attempts to disturb the healthful working of the Act have always proceeded, and in proportion as their pestilent influence is cleared away, the country will find that the existing law renders the pursuits of commerce safe to all who will seek to understand and watch its operations. The animosity with which it is denounced by that class who fatten on such institutions as the Liverpool Borough Bank and the Western of Scotland is an indication of its value. The conflict is one of life or death. The speculator in produce, without capital or talent, assuming to be a millionaire, certain of a large fortune if the market advances, and trusting to the fears of his banking accomplices to uphold him if his game goes wrong—the bank, with its "wealthy proprietary," (irrespective of a score or two of widows and orphans,) gambling by means of re-discounts to ten times the extent of its available resources, so as to make large dividends and surplus profits, to cover the most disgraceful losses—the popular manager, to whom everything is intrusted, usually an upstart, proud of his power to crush the business of any respectable house by backing up with unlimited loans a act of pennyless protégés to counteract its operations—and the money firms who assist the process, only so long as it is thoroughly safe,—all alike are conscious that between them and the Bank Charter Act there can be no quarter. If, when gold is wanted to pay our foreign creditors or to meet a sudden emergency, like the Indian mutiny or the American crisis, the great shipper of goods and produce who a year previously was, perhaps, junior clerk in a third-rate, cousing-house is to be driven to sell at any price because he has not a farthing of independent capital to enable him to hold on; if the local joint-stock bank, instead of screening his insolvency, is to be compelled from a suspension of its London facilities to let him go; and if the whole set are ultimately obliged to break up unheaped by their former supporters, solely from the Bank of England not being allowed to issue any quantity of notes that might be necessary to postpone such a consummation, it is easy to conceive there can be no limit to the bitterness of the denunciations against the principle which leads to this lamentable conclusion. If the people at large were to allow themselves to be duped into the combination, the spectacle would indeed be deplorable. They are urged to join in a cry which would enable those who by over speculation have driven up the prices of all kinds of commodities to force the consumers still to pay high rates, and compel the prudent capitalist, who now finds his money worth 10 ⅜ cent. to prop up the delusion by lending it at 5. They are also asked to lower the standing of the nation in the NEWS OF THE DAY.

The steamship Vanderbilt arrived at this port at an early hour yesterday morning. We publish elsewhere the important financial news of which we were previously advised by telegraph. The articles from London journals on the panic, and the effect of the suspension of the Bank Charter Act, will be read with interest. We give full particulars of the commercial failures that have taken place throughout Great Britain since last advices. The Persia still had not arrived in London, but detailed telegrams had been received from Trieste of the important intelligence from the East.

The Royal Mail steamship Africa, which left Liverpool about 9 o'clock on the morning of the 14th, arrived last evening. Her advices are not as late as those by the Vanderbilt, the latter having left Southampton at midnight of the 14th.

Our special dispatch from Washington this morning will be found highly interesting. The President and Governor WALKER yesterday had a long and friendly interview relative to Kansas affairs, in which the propriety of sustaining the action of the Constitutional Convention was fully discussed. It is understood that the difference of opinion between them is so radical that open hostility is considered inevitable, involving a split of the National Democracy—Governor WALKER heading the conservatives and President BUCHANAN the radicals. The President holds that as the Convention was authorized by Congress, he is bound to sustain its action, while the Governor contends that this amounts to an assertion of the right of Congress to force any constitution on the Territory, instead of leaving it to the people. It is believed that in any event Governor WALKER will not resign, and if the President should preserve him a direct issue on this ground will be made, which will divide the Democracy in the next Congress—in which event the President will be in the minority.

The gathering of statesmen in the China Seas will now soon take place, it having been deferred by the Indian mutiny and other causes. Our Minister, Mr. BURNS, will have arrived at Hong Kong about the same time with the Envoys from the European Powers. What impression they will make upon the policy of the Celestial Empire, by diplomacy or by force, remains for be seen, but according to the latest information, the Emperor, though surrounded and pressed by internal commotion, was determined to resist the demands both of England and France. Affairs in China will soon, therefore, again engage general attention. It is reported that a special messenger is to be sent out immediately to our Minister with important dispatches, which will indicate the interest which our Government will take in the matter, though we have in view only a limited extension of our commercial privileges in that quarter, and the safety of our citizens and their property.

Advices from the Rio Grande to the 7th inst. consider two weeks' inter news from the Northern States of Mexico. A rumor very generally prevailed that the Federal Government had ordered a body of troops under command of Gen. MORAN, to the border moved thereto by the unsettled political and social state of the country, especially the continued difficulties between the civil and ecclesiastical powers. The subscription to the Rio Grande and Monterey Railroad amounted to upward of a million of dollars.

Yesterday was very generally observed as a day of thanksgiving. The places of business were for the most part closed, and discourses were delivered in nearly all the churches. The various charitable institutions were crowded with visitors who contributed liberally towards the comfort and happiness of their inmates. The weather was fine, and the day and the good things that came with it were enjoyable and enjoyed.

Party Obligations.

We have been so long accustomed in this land of liberty to denounce the slavish obedience of Jesuits, and to laugh at the Divine right of kings, that the doctrines recently promulgated in Tammany Hall upon the subject of party allegiance, seem to have struck the majority of us dumb. This sudden assault upon everything we deemed most sacred and most impregnable has, apparently, found the mass of us unprepared and unprotected. People don't generally keep on hand a store of arguments for the defence of first principles, and are, consequently, not prepared with demonstrations, when all the axioms are suddenly denied.

We are, therefore, hardly surprised that so many citizens had wait, managing then should, in the first paroxysm of surprise, bow in prostration to Mr. CONNAMARA's monstrous deliverance upon the subject of "party nominations." To assert that every one who calls himself a Democrat is obliged, upon pain of being stigmatized as an apostate to his creed, to support the man whom the caucus designates for office, though he be perfectly persuaded that the nominee is an unprincipled knave—a public robber—is to adopt the very worst features of the social systems of priestcraft and kingcraft, by which the Old World has so long been desolated. Entire, implicit, unreasoning obedience to the behests of the King or the General of the Order, is one of these "doctrines of devils" from which the human race has already suffered so long, and from which our forefathers came here to be delivered.

The right of private judgment is not simply an article in the creed of Protestants; it is one of the first-fruits of the fire of political liberty. Party organizations, which have been carried to such perfection here, were instituted for the purpose of enabling men, whose ways of thinking on public questions were similar, to act in concert. To secure this concert, identity of opinions upon public questions is necessary; but it is by no means necessary that all the members should hold the same opinions regarding men. It is quite possible to subscribe to every article of a creed, and yet be firmly persuaded that John Jones is a rascal. To believe that the Bible is the supreme rule of faith and conduct, by no means entails the necessity of accepting Lucretia as a Saint or Lovejoy as an Apostle. The contribution of a party creed is a recommendation; the attempt to make it an imperative and binding dictation is an impudent attempt to introduce into the United States the class elections, class callings, class freedom of choice, and class worship, which the Fathers of Tammany Hall have so long lauded. Entire, implicit, unreasoning obedience to the behests of the King or the General of the Order, as the first and most sacred of duties, is one of these "doctrines of devils" from which the human race has already suffered so long, and from which our forefathers came here to be delivered.

To secure this concert, identity of opinions upon public questions is necessary; but it is by no means necessary that all the members should hold the same opinions regarding men. It is quite possible to subscribe to every article of a creed, and yet be firmly persuaded that John Jones is a rascal. To believe that the Bible is the supreme rule of faith and conduct, by no means entails the necessity of accepting Lucretia as a Saint or Lovejoy as an Apostle. The contribution of a party creed is a recommendation; the attempt to make it an imperative and binding dictation is an impudent attempt to introduce into the United States the class elections, class callings, class freedom of choice, and class worship, which the Fathers of Tammany Hall have so long lauded. The Democracy, in a manner do not, such as Tammany Hall intended it to be. It was established for the promotion of the highest liberty and the broadest equality, for the annihilation of cliques and corporations, and privileges, and the assertion of individual rights,—and individual freedom of action as the only true basis of government. With these ends in view it has labored for fifty years with unshaken constancy, and a host of the greatest names in our history have served in its ranks. The unscrupulous horde who have now got at the head of its affairs in Tammany Hall have deliberately set about elevating the Association into a position of superiority to the ends for which it was established. One of those ends was the selection of honest and high-principled public servants. But CONNAMARA says: "Not so. The organization is something better than honesty. If we propose a devil incarnate you are bound to support him. If we turn round here on this platform, and either in folly or knavery choose a convict from Sing Sing to govern this City, you, the Democracy, are bound to confirm our choice."

We doubt whether LOUIS NAPOLEON, or even ALEXANDER of Russia, ever put forward anything more calculated to startle Republican ears than this. If we are not greatly mistaken, however, there are no business men in this City who possess even a glimmering of information with regard to the principle which underlies the basis of Republicanism, or who have had the smallest amount of training in self-government, who will be gulled by a doctrine so monstrous. Every citizen of the United States, who is worthy of the name, owes his first and undivided allegiance to the country at large, and a portion to the town he lives in. He can best testify this allegiance by devotion to truth and justice and honesty. If he joins a party in good faith, he joins it for the promotion of sound principles, and for the maintenance of good government. If for the sake of dispatch and of union he delegates to any man, or body of men, the right of selecting the persons best fitted for the performance of public duties, he does not thereby lay down his judgment and his individuality in base self-abnegation at their feet. He reserves to himself, undoubtedly, the right of confirming this action or not as he sees fit. If, through mistake or willful misconduct, he finds they have designated a candidate for office whose election will, in his opinion, inflict injury on the country at large, there is no room for hesitation. The country should be his first care. Parties rise and fall; they are born in an hour, and perish in a day; but the State is something better, greater, more valuable than any party which ever existed. We owe to it not to let ourselves be beguiled by Messrs. CONNAMARA and DOWNEY into blind support of corruption and intrigue. The political cries of these gentlemen would sound simple and indisputable in the latitude of Rome or St. Petersburg, but here in New-York it is the plainest blasphemy against liberty, and in the flattest contradiction to the spirit of our institutions. Nothing is so well established as the responsibility of our legislators to their constituents. No one has ever yet claimed from the latter a blank indorsement of all the acts of their representatives. What gives a caucus powers which no Senator or Assemblyman has ever dared to claim?

The Suspension of the Bank of England Charter.

We have elsewhere extracted the comments made by the London Times upon the action of the English Government in relaxing the restrictions put by the Act of 1844 upon the Issue Department of the Bank of England. It will be seen that the views of our cotemporary coincide in all material points with those which we expressed on the first receipt of the telegraphic intelligence of the measure, and that the Treasury letter of the 12th inst. is not regarded in London as the death-warrant either of the Bank of England or of British commerce.

The ultimate significance of the step can hardly be matter of doubt. Its immediate effect upon the trade of the United Kingdom will be extensively beneficial, and with the passing of the tempest of panic will pass away all possibility of material damage to result from it to the credit of the great financial regulator. The force of the blow will be felt by the Bank in Parliament, and we can only reiterate the hope that he rash, and convulsionary changes will be made in the frame work of an Institution which has certainly been, on the whole, more steadily useful and more tranquilly influential in its relations with the commerce of the world since its reconstitution in 1844 than it was before. We have tried in New-York the experiment of permitting our Banks to do for themselves what the English Government reserves to itself the right of doing for the Bank of England, and whatever may be the improvements and modifications of which the Bank Charter Act of 1844 is legitimately susceptible, it is not in the financial history of this country, or of England, that arguments can be found to support a reaction from the principles of Sir ROBERT PEEL's legislation. The friends of the Charter may safely appeal to the New-York of 1857 and to the London of 1839 in defence of their system, at least from an uncompromising and general assault. The discussion which will certainly be had in Parliament of fundamental principles of banking and currency, will go on contemporaneously with debates in our own Congress, to be provoked by the position of our own affairs, and by propositions which it is generally understood that the President means to submit upon these important subjects. And it is reasonable, therefore, to extract from the disorders and confusion of the hour, such consolation as may be found, in the hope that something may be done both in England and at home to establish the financial relations of the commercial world upon a safer, because a more philosophic and comprehensive basis, than heretofore.

It will become the intelligent supporters of the Bank Charter Act in Great Britain to take into account the fact that when that instrument was framed, neither California nor Australia had been introduced into the system of commerce; while it must not be lost sight of at Washington, that the exchanges of this country necessitate an authentic representative of specie, quite as urgently as they call for an adequate and assured supply of valued paper.

Latest News of the Indian Mutiny.

The latest details of the latest news from India brought by the Vanderbilt, confirm the substantial value of the successes won by the British before Delhi and Lucknow, and reinforce the conviction we have already expressed, that the menacing importance of the Sepoy revolt has been thoroughly dissipated. The mutineers, under the inspiration of their Mohammedan leaders, made this outbreak from the first a contest of race with race. They challenged the superiority of the rulers to whom, for a century, they and their fathers had submitted. Doubtless many recollections of the Affghan disasters, and many vague impressions of the checks inflicted upon the ever-victorious English in that great Russian war, of which vague histories were transmitted to Bengal along the mysterious channels which penetrate and permeate the societies of Asia, mingled in the minds of the soldiery of India with the instigations of the Oudian aristocracy, upon whom events are more and more distinctly fastening the chief responsibility of the rebellion. But, by whatever motives excited, and animated with whatever hopes, it is certain that the mutineers of Meerut, the defenders of Delhi, the assassins of Futteyghur and Cawnpore fully counted upon humiliating the "narrow-souled, yellow-faced infidels," upon routing them in the field, upon disgracing them in defeat.

These expectations have been equally disappointed, and in this disappointment England has made herself mistress of the position. This cardinal point has been won, too, more rapidly and with a less exhausting display of power than was anticipated, even by the most sanguine of English statesmen. That the English armies in India, however small their numbers, would be able to hold their own until the arrival of reinforcements from home, was conceded from the first by all who possessed any proper intelligence of the relative values of the opposing parties, and any authentic information of the general attitude of the country. But the English armies in India were not content with holding their own. They assaulted the mutiny in its centre at Delhi, besieging a garrison of quadruple their own strength, and finally taking the city by storm after a sanguinary contest of nearly a week, with a greatly superior force, in the streets and square of a hostile capital and under a September sun.

They repaired the errors of incompetent commanders along a line of nearly nine hundred miles, and succeeded in so balancing the scale of chances in their favor, at an early stage of the disturbances, as to command the adhesion of all the native princes most important to their cause.

And finally, at the expiration of a little more than four months from the beginning of the troubles, they had virtually restored the threatened supremacy of their race throughout the Peninsula, and were only awaiting the arrival of the great armament dispatched to their assistance to complete the great work so nobly begun.

The last telegram received at the India House from Bombay, and published in London on the 13th inst., affords us the materials for estimating the position of affairs at the end of the second week in October.

The mutineers were in full retreat from Delhi, passing mostly, as we had expected, to the south and southeast, and in the direction of Rajpootare. This region, intervening between the Presidencies of Bengal and Bombay, would naturally be the resort of the rebels after they had abandoned the hope of success in the northwest. Many of the dependent and independent States which it contains have from the first been disaffected, and its physical characteristics are favorable to a continued disturbance of a guerrilla cast. Malwa, Indore, Gwalior, are still reported to be in a state of confusion, and the mutineers of Sandpore are still embodied and in arms. From the frontiers of this territory to the west the Bombay Presidency may be menaced, and we are told of attempted risings at Khandeish and Nassick, in that particular quarter of the Bombay dominions immediately adjacent thereto. These risings were, however, unimportant, and, in the presence of the fidelity of the Bombay forces, insignificant. A column had also been thrown forward from Aurungabad, in the Bombay Presidency, to protect the district. Moreover, the gallant and faithful Scinde had completely overawed the Gwalior mutineers on the 28th of September, four days after the fall of Delhi and one day after the relief of Lucknow, and of course before the favorable influence of either of these events could have been brought to bear, either upon his own loyalty, or upon the fears of his revolted subjects. This news is the more important that it comes to us coupled with an intimation that NANA SAHIB was himself at Gwalior seeking support there for his operations in Oude. If this be so, it proves the little confidence of the besiegers of Lucknow in their own capacity to maintain their position, and makes still more certain the final deliverance of the English garrison at that place from their long and unparalleled endurance. Generals HAVELOCK and OUTRAM, after destroying the approaches of the Sepoy army, and strengthening the hands of the garrison, had found it impossible to withdraw the besieged without a stronger force, and had consequently fallen back upon Cawnpore, where they were daily expecting troops from Calcutta. The communications along the Ganges had been pretty thoroughly cleared—the heavy batteries and blue-jackets of Capt. PEEL having reached Meizapore, 44 miles below Allahabad, and consequently about 160 miles distant from Cawnpore, by the 26th of September.

Quiet was restored throughout the greater part of Bengal, and disorder was dying away everywhere excepting in the kingdom of Oude, in Rajpootare, and along the far Western frontiers of Scinde. The loyalty of the Ghoorkas had been illustrated by a victory over the Sepoys at Mundree on the 19th September, while the Madras Native troops on the 26th engaged and defeated a body of Bengalese and Oudian revolters at Jubbulpore.

In a word, the work of the British was rapidly defining itself within limits comparatively narrow, and the tide of danger was ebbing as rapidly as it rose. When it is considered that the news of the British successes had yet to be diffused throughout the Peninsula, and that only one battalion of the 90th Infantry had yet been landed and brought into action at the date of our latest news, it will very clearly appear that public the political war the financial position of Great Britain is likely to be materially affected by the further movement of affairs in India.

Bankrupt Laws—The English and American.

The principle has been pretty generally adopted in England, in legislating on bankruptcy, that the great, and in fact the only object to be kept in view, was the surrender of all the debtor's assets, and their fair division amongst the creditors. In the earlier bankrupt acts the idea evidently still prevailed that the debtor, above all, in cases where he had been guilty of misconduct, even before bankruptcy, deserved to be punished. In all the laws on the subject previous to 1849, the power of granting or refusing the certificate was still left in the hands of a majority in number and value of the creditors. If the bankrupt's behavior had not been thoroughly satisfactory to them, they could prevent his ever recommencing business. The commissioner could not take notice of any of his acts prior to the act of bankruptcy, but the creditors could, and where they happened to prove "vindictive," the power lodged in their hands might have been used with terrible effect. The courts decided more than once that if the bankrupt complied with all the requirements of the law as regarded the surrender of his property, and the disclosure of his liabilities, they were under a "moral obligation" to sign his certificate, but as moral obligations were not capable of legal enforcement, this ruling did not do much for the debtor.

Neither in our bankrupt law of 1800, nor in that of 1841, was any such deference paid to the creditors' feelings or opinions. The framers of these acts copied English legislation pretty closely in all particulars but this, but it was evidently their opinion that a creditor was possessed of no rights which a Bankrupt Court was called upon to recognize. His part in bankruptcy proceedings was confined to proving his debt, and coming to the assignee in due time to receive his dividend of one or two cents in the dollar, as the case might be. The law of 1841 provided that the certificate discharging the debtor from his liabilities was to be signed by a majority in number and value of the creditors. If they refused to sign it, however, the bankrupt might either demand a trial of the case by a jury in the District Court, or might appeal to the Circuit Court, and the Judge of the Circuit Court might try it either summarily or by a jury, at the option of the bankrupt. Of course he was wise enough to call upon the Court to try it summarily, seeing that the very next clause of the act provides that when it shall appear to the Court, upon this final hearing, that the bankrupt has made a full disclosure and surrender of his estate, as required by the act, "and has in all things conformed to its directions, the Court shall make a discharge and grant a certificate," whether the creditors are satisfied or not. It would be difficult to imagine a more ingenious contrivance for enabling rogues to whitewash themselves under form of law.

The feeling of sympathy with the "unfortunate debtor," which led to our legislation of 1841, was steadily at work in England, but owing to the slow progress of change in that country, did not produce its natural results till 1849. In that year an act consolidating the bankrupt law was passed, which threw the creditors overboard, just as we had done, and compelled the Commissioner to grant a certificate if the debtor had gone through the Court in due form, no matter what the causes were which had led to his insolvency. As a sort of mild substitute, however, for the veto of which the creditors had been deprived, the certificates were to be divided into three classes, and the Commissioner was to avail himself of this classification to express his opinion of the nature of the causes which had led to the bankruptcy. Unavoidable misfortune could thus receive its due meed of commendation from the Court, and fraud, or overtrading, or extravagance, its due stigma. This has turned out in practice to be a complete and somewhat mischievous farce. The Commissioners in the various Courts in London, and the Provinces, have, of course, no fixed rule by which to estimate the bankrupt's probity or dishonesty, and their opinions of the thousand and one transactions of commercial life are as varied as their temperaments and experience. The principle which they lay down in the classification of bankrupts, too, is totally different in different districts. Some grant a first-class certificate as the rule, and the second or third as the exception—that is to say, only in cases of the grossest fraud. Others again generally grant nothing but the third class, and reserve the first for the rare cases of extraordinary virtue, overwhelmed by the most extraordinary misfortune. This confusion, of course, involves great injustice. It places on some men a stigma which they do not merit, and which it was not intended they should bear. It attributes to others, in the eyes of the world, an amount of probity for which the Commissioner never intended to give them credit.

The Birmingham bankrupt, who comes out of the ordeal with a third-class certificate, is in reality, perhaps, in a moral point of view, on exactly the same footing with the Londoner, who is placed in the first rank; but the public naturally suppose that the difference is a real one, and estimate him accordingly. Besides, there are on general principles very grave objections to placing in the hands of a single Judge the power of arbitrarily affixing a blot upon a man's character, at the very moment when his character is his sole property and sole dependence.

The great objection, in short, to the English bankrupt law, as it exists at present, and to our own as it did exist in 1841, is that neither is in reality anything but a device for relieving debtors of their liabilities—and neither makes the slightest attempt to do that which should be the great object of all bankruptcy legislation, the repression of the extravagance, fraud, overtrading and recklessness which lead to insolvency. It should be a penal measure, as well as a measure of relief, as we propose showing on an early occasion. It should hang in terrorem over the heads of those who feel disposed to operate largely on other men's funds, so that every trader should ask himself, what undertaking anything of consequence, if he knew that he would be hung up for it, and imprisoned for life, if he failed in it.

Thursday.—As all commercial transactions, earlier have been generally suspended by the two successive days of mourning and religious worship, have recently taken place here, we have they will not fail to notice, and be conducted by the fact, that yesterday, the festival of Thanksgiving was kept up here with as much radical and quiet enjoyment as in any village in New-England. There were no mobs, no murders, no fires even, nor any unusual burglaries or street raves of any kind. The churches of every denomination were filled with pious worshipers, except the Catholics, who do not acknowledge the right of the Governor to interfere in religious affairs. Great multitudes of the younger part of our population went out into the country to play at cricket, base ball, and for target exercise, and, notwithstanding the hard times, there were the usual number of family dinners, and the poor were not forgotten. In the evening the various places of public amusement were well filled, and, though the weather was cold, the air was clear and the sky bright, and the hilarity and enjoyment fitting the day were universally diffused. Altogether it was a day to be thankful for, as well as to give thanks in.

The English Generals in India.

The victorious HAVELOCK has been raised to the rank of Lieutenant-General, and invested with the order of the Bath as a Knight Commander. These honors are doubtless but the first blossoms of the harvest of distinction which awaits him, if he should be so fortunate as to escape the fatality which up to this time has relentlessly pursued the English leaders in India.

Of Sir COLIN CAMPBELL, who is or ought to be actively engaged in the duties of the chief command, and whose reported differences with Lord CANNING have been formally contradicted under his own hand, we publish elsewhere a brief and interesting biographical sketch from the columns of the London Times. Our English cotemporary justly speaks of the gallant Highlander as an "able plebeian," but either from accident or design neglects to say how truly "plebeian" his origin is. Sir COLIN is not entitled to the name of CAMPBELL by direct descent. His paternal name is MOLAVERTY, and his father was in early youth a shepherd on the estates of the Duke of ATHOL. His mother was a Miss CAMPBELL, a "Scotch cousin" of the house of ARGYLE, who lived in the family of ATHOL as a governess, and falling in with the handsome young shepherd conceived an attachment for him which resulted in marriage. She insisted on giving to her son COLIN her own more conspicuous name rather than the humble patronymic of his sire, and by such influence as she was able through her noble relatives to exert secured for him the commission which admitted him to service in the royal army, and opened to him that pathway of honor which he so resolutely and so successfully pursued. His father, we believe, still lives in the Highlands, a hale old man, supported in a condition of ease by his celebrated son, and destined, we hope, to rejoice in many more distinctions won by his blood if not attributed to his name.

The London journals, divided on all other points, and ready to wage an internecine war over the past and future of Indian policy, unite in paying tributes of well won honors to the memory of Generals NEILL and NICHOLSON, fallen in the service of their country, and in the flush of triumph. The first of these officers was an Irishman, in whom the fiery gallantry native to his people had been disciplined by long experience of service in the field and in the cabinets of India. He had borne the brunt of disaster with MACNAGHTEN in the Affghan war, and had shared the glories of conquest with EDWARDES in the Punjab. He was on civil service in this territory when the revolt broke out, and to the energy and skill with which he secured the transit of the seige train to Delhi, the early fall of the Mogul Capital must chiefly be attributed. He was wounded in the storming of the city, and died of his wounds a few days after. General NICHOLSON was one of the few young generals of England, having been born in 1822.

General NEILL was also in the vigor of life, not having completed his 47th year, when he was killed in the capture of the Nana's intrenchments at Lucknow. NEILL was a Scotchman, and his name adds a new lustre to the annals of the native country of BURNS. He had achieved distinction during the two Burmese expeditions, and subsequently as commander of the Turkish Contingent in the great war with Russia—while his recent services in the relief of Benares, and the forced march on Cawnpore, had given him a great and promising position among the commanders on whom England could rely in India.

THE FOREIGN PRESS IN NEW-YORK.—A gentleman, who represents in this City one of the most respectable journals of France, complains to us of the "incivility" which excludes himself from the leading places of amusement in New-York, while the correspondents of the American Press are politely welcomed with the "freedom of the theatres" in Paris. We, of course, have nothing to do with the business arrangements of our "managers," but we are very sure that whatever these arrangements may be, none of these gentlemen can have been deliberately guilty of rudeness or injustice in such circumstances, and that if our correspondent had suffered any real wrong at their hands, the simple statement of the facts will secure him the proper redress.

Defects of Our Police.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

If men were angels, the use or necessity of laws might be made matter for doubt, but as men happen to be only men, the efficiency of laws ought certainly not to be disregarded.

It is an established fact, that the wealth and welfare of a community depend on good and just laws, efficiently administered, and this is easily illustrated. The property gained by honest industry should be protected; for who will labor while conscious that all his labor goes for naught, and that its fruits may be snatched from him with impunity by vagabonds too lazy to work.

Our present position is, to be sure, an unpleasant one. Misfortune has undoubtedly overtaken us. But there are two ways of meeting misfortune; one is, to lie supinely on our backs and endure it with the abject submission of cravens; the other, to rise manfully and meet it with the courage and energy of true men. But the true cause of what we are at present suffering, so literally, may be traced to our very apathy itself. Our very suffering is caused by our craven submission. If we would only bestir ourselves, investigate keenly, and act promptly and vigorously, we might soon put a stop to all this rowdyism and crime. What our Government wants is sound, vigorous treatment, and lo! our Government would rise from the dead.

What, for instance, is wanting in one very important department—that, namely, of Police? We want numbers, perhaps, but yet not numbers so much as discipline? How, what is to prevent our having such discipline? Nothing under the sun but the entire submission of the rulers to the ruled. What is to prevent the Police Commissioners from ordering that policemen shall not cease swearing on their "beat" as long as they are on duty, and not only to order it, but to enforce it. This is no time for mawkish sentimentality. The policemen know the conditions of the service, and if he refuses then he ceases to be a policeman as soon as any other citizen of the City, who may be disposed to do his duty, can be found to take his place. The difference of expense between a policeman who swears and one who does not, is so trifling, that it is not worth mentioning. I have conversed with many men, and all have declared that we want a better class of men in the metropolis. If it be so in many other cities, why not in this? Why not, if it be true, as we have heard, that the police are actually taxed to pay for the uniforms of the men, why not actually be relieved of the expense, and compelled to wear clothes of their own, as other citizens do

THANKSGIVING.

To the Goddess of Gold, be thanks,
And if the clear Earth be dear,
Those little leaves that Nature makes
Have not her share of smile and wishes.

Venison and game are neither near,
Poultry and pork are both the same,
Mutton and veal are both too dear,
And rye to me are fish and game.

The Thanksgiver leaves me out,
Credit and cash have taken wings,
Then know my watch is up the spout,
And railroad stock no income brings.

The dunns all know my brown-stone front,
The landlord calls in vain for rent,
Shall I give up? No, that I won't,
While money's much but stocks are cent.

LITERARY.

There is the usual "hiatus and awful pause" in the publishing business, and an unusually dearth of new books; but, as the holiday season approaches, we may anticipate the appearance of some of the illustrated works which were prepared for the present year before the monetary revulsion commenced. At some counter of the holidays we received we from APPLETON & CO. who, indeed, sent us a bundle of small books for small people, of a very superior character. They are entitled George Ready, or Hook to Live for Others—By ROSAMOND OLIVE COLE; A Place for Everything and Everything in its Place—By Amelia B. Edwards; and Children's Holidays: A Story-Book for the Whole Year. The noticeable characteristics of these juvenile books is their purity of tone, and the elegant style in which they are "got up," the elegance not being of that gaudy and meretricious kind peculiar to similar works, but consisting of the neatness and beauty of the type, binding, paper and wood-cuts.

Another pretty little child's book, from A. D. F. RANDOLPH, is entitled, Paper-Doll's Furniture; How to Make It. By C. B. ALLEN. It is not a book to read, but is a new volume of that charming little series for little folks, called the Paper-Doll Family.

All our lady authors seem to be ambitious of doing something useful as well as ornamental. We recently noticed Mrs. ELLET's Encyclopedia of housekeeping knowledge, and we have now a similar work from Mrs. HALE, published by PETERSON, of Philadelphia, entitled Mrs. Hale's Receipts for the Million. The volume contains the enormous number of 4,646 receipts for doing almost everything. The range of Mrs. HALE's useful knowledge is rather alarming for a bachelor to contemplate; it runs the whole circle of domestic science, from puddings and pastry to "Phrenology" and "physiognomy." Recipe No. 696 has the fearful heading, "Preference and Piety." In brief, Mrs. HALE, we would modestly intimate, attempts to teach her spouse in her "Receipts." A little learning in such cases as a family receipt-book is not half so dangerous as a great deal. One does not expect to be instructed in the art of cooking applications and the science of astronomy in the same volume. If ladies who are desirous of doing good to mankind by publishing family recipes would confine themselves strictly to culinary matters, they would be of much greater service than by attempting to teach morals as well as pie-making to the dyspeptics.

Messrs. A. S. BARNES & Co. have published the National Fourth Reader, containing a course of instruction in elocution. By RICHARD G. PARKER and J. MADISON WATSON.

MAGAZINES.

It is one of the advantages of Magazines that they must be published regularly on the first of the month, let the times be as hard as they may; and the reading public are sure of their fresh monthly budget of good literature in Harper, the Knickerbocker, the Atlantic, and the other monthlies, let what will happen. A magazine is only a monthly volume, containing the very best literature of the time. Here is Harper's for December, for example, with its pictures, and poems, and essays, and stories, and criticisms, and Easy Chair, giving us, in addition, the first part of THACKERAY's new novel of The Virginians, illustrated by the author, and the first part of a new story written expressly for the Magazine, by CHARLES READE. READE's story is entitled Jack o'Lantern; A Matter-of-Fact Romance." The hero of it is a cockney Bohemian, or a Bohemian cockney. It opens in the crisp, dramatic style of the author, but there is too little of it given to enable us to become deeply interested in the story.

The Virginians is a sequel to Esmond, and it reads like the continuation of that quiet fiction, without the affected quaintness of language which was deemed necessary by the author to impart an air of verisimilitude to his narrative. The first chapter of the Virginians commences very appropriately and pleasantly with an allusion to the history of FRANKLIN, the historian.

"On the library wall of one of the most famous mansions of America, there hang two crossed swords, which the owners wore in the great War of Independence. The one carried was gallantly drawn in the service of his King, the other was the weapon of a brave and honored republican soldier. The possessor of the harmless trophy has caused it to be set in a frame alike honored in his ancestor's country and his own, where guests such as his are always a peaceful welcome."

The whole history resembles one of pleasant dreams in the drawer's study of Boston."

The case might have been stated much more strongly than Mr. THACKERAY has put it. These crossed swords were both worn at the battle of Bunker Hill, and both by the ancestors of the Morris—one the gallant Col. PRESCOTT, and the other the maternal ancestor of the historian, who was an officer of the King's navy.

These crossed swords, as the author hints, are emblematic of the fortunes of the two heroes of the romance; the Virginians are the two brothers who espouse opposite sides in our war of independence, but they are only painted to us in the first part of the story, in their childhood, while "Mr. Washington" was a "young neighbor," living at Mount Vernon. We have the WASHINGTONS, the EFFINGHAMS, and the CASTLEWOODS presented to us, again, with glimpses of home-life in England, and plantation-life in Virginia, and a great deal of family history, which is rather tedious to read in the beginning, but very necessary to a perfect comprehension of things yet to come. THACKERAY may always be trusted to call upon to reward the closest attention of his reader. He has no unmeaning sentences in his narratives; it will not do to skip anything, because it will be found necessary by and by, to fill up some portion of something else. There are no incidents without their consequences, nor any characters which stand by themselves and might be omitted as well as not, as in the novels of DICKENS. After the first explanatory chapters of his novels have been passed, then the interest commences, the plot thickens, the thread of the story wins itself around your heart, and you cannot let it go until you follow it to its end. Yet all of his novels are rather dry, technical, and a trifle tedious in its beginning. The promise of what the Virginians is to be is given at the commencement of the last chapter. We will let the author tell what he intends to do in his own words:

"In the Revolutionary war the subjects of this story—natives of America, and children of the Old Dominion—were found on different sides in the quarrel, carrying opposite banners, and fighting, perhaps, on opposite shores, their heavily armed ancestors, Cavaliers and Puritans, in the same cause. The Colonel in scarlet, and the gentleman in blue and buff, hung side by side in the waiting-room of the Warrings, in England, where a kinsman, perhaps, of the brothers has drawn their portraits, with books, and papers which belonged to them. In the Warrington family, and on mantelpieces, there are other souvenirs of that remarkable race, these officers were charged upon by the same of "the Virginians," by which name their descendants are christened.

These both of them passed much time in Europe. They lived just on the verge of that Old World from which we are drifting away so swiftly. They were familiar with many varieties of men and fortune. Their lot brought them in contact with personages of whom we read only in books, who seem alive as I read in the Virginians' letters regarding them—whose voices I almost fancy I hear, as I read the yellow pages, written scores of years since, blotted with the boyish tears of disappointed passion, dutifully dispatched after formal balls and ceremonies of the grand Old World, exhibited by some fine, correct old gentleman; may there be one that has a bullet through it, and of which a greater portion of the text is blotted out with the blood of the bearer.

These letters had, probably, never been preserved but for the affectionate thrift of one person, to whom they never failed in their distant correspondence. Their mother kept all her soul's letters from the very first—in which Henry, the young, as of the twins, sends his love to his brother, thinking of a sprain, at his grandfather's house of Castlewood, in Virginia, and thanks his grandpapa for a horse which he rides with his sister—down to the last, "from my beloved son," which reached her but a few hours before her death. The venerable lady never visited Europe, save once with her parents in the reign of George the Second; took refuge in Richmond when the house of Castlewood was burned down during the war; and was called Madam EMOND ever after that event; never caring much, for the name or family of Warrington, which she held in very slight estimation as compared to her own.

The letters of the Virginians, as the reader will presently see, from specimens to be shown to him, are by no means dull. They are hints rather than descriptions—indications and outlines chiefly. It may be that the present writer has mistaken the forms, and filled in the color wrongly; but, poring over the documents, I have tried to imagine the situation of the writer—where he was, and by what persons surrounded. I have drawn the figures as I fancied they were; set down conversations as I think I might have heard them; and so, to the best of my ability, endeavored to revivify the by-gone times and people. With what success the task has been accomplished—with what profit or amusement to himself—the kind reader will please to determine."

We do not doubt his success in writing an entertaining story, but we have our apprehensions of his handling the American side of his narrative in a manner which will be satisfactory to his American readers. It is true that his subject is as much history to us as it is to him, but then to us it is a tradition while to him it is a study. We have inherited our knowledge of the times of which he writes, while he has gained his information out of books. He will not make such pictures of our Revolution as COOPER has given in his Spy.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY FOR DECEMBER.—The second number of the new magazine is in all respects fully up to the standard of the first. The most noticeable and enjoyable article is the continuation, and, we regret to learn, the conclusion of the "Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, or Every Man his own Boswell." It overflows with pungent humor, and sparkling wit, and is in all respects in the genuine magazine vein. LONGFELLOW and WHITTIER contribute poems, and PRESCOTT and EMERSON prose articles; the historian gives a chapter, probably, from an unpublished volume of his History of PHILIP II., on the Battle of Lepanto, and the philosopher's contribution is an Essay on Solitude, full of seeming paradoxes and sagacious observations. There were no political opinions in the first number indicating the tone which it would take; but there is an article in the present one which is sufficiently clear and positive in that regard. It is entitled "Where will it all end?" and is an open, fair-and-square, well-written and perfectly unambiguous declaration of sentiments on the subject of Slavery, placing the magazine among the decided and staunch opponents of Slavery-extension. Every one understood that this was to be the political character of the Atlantic, and the appearance of the article will create no commotion, nor affect its interests in any degree. The general literary excellence of the magazine is a point that will be conceded by all classes; but its popularity must depend upon the variety and freshness of its contents rather than their style or polish. It must speak for itself hereafter.

REWARDS ON BILLS AND PROMISSORY NOTES. EARLE, GOULD & CO.: New-York.

This treatise is not a commentary on other books upon the same subject, but a new work on the subject, prepared for the American Bar, and giving the proper prominence to American law on the subject. It is very full and copious, and the list of authorities extensive. A lawyer of our acquaintance says that on two or three points he has found light in this book which he had been unable to find elsewhere, after somewhat extended search.

The Probability of a Decline in Gold.

Under this title the Revue des Deux Mondes has published three interesting articles by M. MICHEL CHEVALIER. Starting from the admission that the manner in which a decline in the value of the precious metals is rendered possible by the public consists in an increase in the price of provisions and merchandise, he opens with the question, "Are we about to witness a rise in the value of every necessary and luxury of life, similar to that which occurred at the time of the discovery of America by CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. (That search, it will be remembered, was undertaken in order to find a short cut to the Indies, which, when found, was found to be a long one.) Some persons have endeavored to produce it. He then proceeds to compare the quantity of gold produced at the beginning of the present century (about 24,000 kilogrammes per annum) with the present amount obtained from California, Australia, and Siberia (300,000 kilogrammes per annum,) being in a single year about the tenth part of all the gold furnished by America during the last three centuries. Here he introduces a new view of the subject. While the gold-seeker of the Rhine (for there are still some, and whose joint efforts do not produce more than 15 kilogrammes of gold per annum) is content with about two francs a day as the reward for his labor, the Californian and Australian diggers consider 19 francs the minimum remuneration they may expect. Now, supposing the yield of the gold-fields to remain unvaried, the value of gold may decline until 19 francs become the ordinary salary not only of a digger, but of any laborer whatever in California and Australia, the cost of provisions and the rate of remuneration being supposed to have then attained that natural level which is still wanting in those countries. But this level once attained, it may be reasonably presumed that the market-price of labor in the auriferous countries must have arrived at about the same standard as in the most civilized countries of the Old World, viz.: five francs a day. Therefore, in the above hypothesis, the value of gold may fall until the price of 15 grammes, which is now 19 francs, comes to be only five francs.

M. M. CHEVALIER shows that France is the country where the largest quantity of gold has been coined during the last seven years; seeing that although England has, within that period, reached the enormous sum of £45,719,000 (1,153,000,000 francs,) still France is ahead of her by 1,024,000,000 francs. On the other hand, the coinage of silver has diminished, and silver coin itself has almost disappeared from circulation. The author now examines the question, as to whether the present annual yield of gold is likely to be permanent; and he comes to the conclusion that it is very probable it will last long enough to occasion a fall in the value of the metal.

But it has been argued that the supply of gold now thrown into circulation will [illegible] by these countries (such as France, the Netherlands and America) [illegible] currency is extensively used, and the habits of luxury which distinguish our period; in the first place, a more economical and estimating employment of the metal would immediately manifest itself in everybody.

[illegible] the Mississippi Steamboat Rainbow.

SEVENTY-FIVE LIVES LOST.

From the Cincinnati Commercial, 24th.

Our special dispatches announce the destruction by fire of the Louisville and New-Orleans packet Rainbow, near Napoleon, Arkansas. The loss of life is variously estimated at from fifty to seventy-five. The Rainbow was built at Louisville, three years since, for the Louisville and Henderson packet trade, but entered the Cincinnati packet lines last season. She was owned by her commander, Capt. W. E. Hargrove, of Leavenworth, Ind., the clerk, Messrs. Wm. and M. Hewett, and Messrs. Hallam, of Louisville. She was worth about $25,000, and, we understand, was insured in Louisville.

The Rainbow was burned on Saturday morning, at 2 o'clock, ten miles above Napoleon, at the head of Island Seventy-five. There were three hundred and forty-seven passengers on board—a large number of them on deck being coal boatmen, returning home. The origin of the fire is attributed to incendiary deck passengers. The loss of life is estimated at from fifty to seventy-five. As soon as the fire was discovered, the boat was run ashore under a full head of steam, where she burned to the water's edge.

From the Chicago Journal.

We have received the following additional particulars in relation to the heart-rending disaster which happened to the schooner Flying Cloud and her crew. She was wrecked about two miles below the mouth of the Calumet, (or Indiana,) and thirty-three miles above this city, on Thursday forenoon. The Captain and six of the crew were frozen to death! Only one sailor, Fairlus Fox, and a boy named Hiram Coleman, were saved, and these were badly frozen. The Flying Cloud left this port on Wednesday last, with 10,000 bushels of wheat. When about fifty miles down the lake, the gale struck her, riddling her sails and rendering her unmanageable. Her boat was soon afterward carried away by the violence of the sea. About 10 o'clock on the morning of Thursday the vessel went ashore at the place mentioned above.

The Captain and crew immediately took to the rigging, where they remained all day, and spent the night on the quarter deck, lashed to the spars. In the morning, two of their number were found dead, and the Captain scarcely able to articulate. About 9 A. M., the mate, Oscar Gammon, jumped overboard, and perceiving two men dragging a boat down to the beach, was directed by them to their shanty at the mouth of the river. He was subsequently found within twenty rods of the shanty frozen and lifeless.

A sailor by the name of BAYES followed the mate overboard, but fell within six rods of the vessel, where his body was afterwards found.

Two of the crew had gone below on board, and he succeeded in reaching the cabin, which was occupied by shingle-makers. One of them furnished him with clothes, and assisted him to Miller's station on the Southern road, a mile or two distant, from whence he came to this city. The boy Coleman managed to get ashore alive with the assistance of the men on shore, and remained at the shanty badly frozen.

Personal.

The Mayor and citizens of Buffalo have tendered a complimentary benefit to the young tragedian Booth, which he has accepted, and it will take place this evening.

P. T. Barnum on Wednesday gained a suit in the Circuit Court of Washington, in which the verdict was for $1,916 15, and interest.

General Haskill, of Tennessee, having recovered from his insanity, is on a lecturing tour.

QUARREL AND MURDER.—The daughters of VAN R. TAYLOR and James Frost, in West Lafayette, Coshocton County, Ohio, got into a quarrel at the door way of Frost. Mr. F., who was chopping wood, ran to separate them with his axe in his hand. Mr. Taylor hearing the disturbance also ran up and in a quarrel which followed between the men, caught the axe from Frost and killed him with a blow on the head. TAYLOR was arrested and committed to answer a charge of murder in the second degree.

From the Boston Transcript.
Of the classic reputation of this poet, every year more and more convinced us. Notwithstanding the fluctuations of schools and criticism in poetry, the elements of Bryant's genius remain unshaken, and he still holds their eternal claim to lyric and honor. He is essentially an American poet; his subject is nature; his art pure, chaste and elevated.
To every thoughtful heart and reverent soul, "Thanatopsis," the "Waterfall," the "Hymn to Death," the "Fire," "The Prairies," the "Future Life," the "Conqueror's Grave," are sources of unmixed delight. They inspire meditation and the study of nature, are full of reasonable significance, and are a "joy forever." We rejoice to meet them once more, printed on the neutral tinted and simple page of this exquisite quarto, and interspersed with such graceful illustrations by the first artists of the day. ... Blackwell's Island, in presenting this edition to our fireside hearts, has made a national offering to the literary and artistic treasures of every American who knows how to unite the highest pleasures of taste with the noblest intellectual recreation and patriotic sympathy.

These steamers, built expressly for Government service, with double engines, under deck; every care has been taken in the construction of hull and machinery to insure safety and speed. The ships have five water-tight compartments, including the engines, so that in the event of collision or stranding, the water could not reach them and the pumps being free to work, the safety of the vessel and passengers would be secured. Recent experiments have demonstrated the absolute necessity of this mode of construction. The accommodations for passengers are believed to combine every comfort and convenience that can be desired.

For nervous and debilitated sufferers, and for removing all the symptoms, viz.: Loss of power, loss of memory, general weakness, dimness of vision, languor and universal lassitude of the muscular system, temporary suffusion, loss of sight, imbecility, &c.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on, (which this medicine invariably removes,) soon follow fatuity and epileptic fits. Who can say that these symptoms are not frequently followed by those direful diseases—Insanity and Consumption?

The records of Insane Asylums, and the melancholy deaths by Consumption, bear ample witness of the truth of this assertion.

With useful measures, man flourishes.
Low sullen sounds his grief beguiles.

NEW AND IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN THE SCIENCE OF MEDICINE.—TRIESEMAR.—None are genuine unless the signatures of the Seals of the Patent Office of England, the Sorbonne, the Royal Pharmacie de Paris and the Imperial College of Vienna, are fixed upon each wrapper and around each case.

Sold by Dr. H. A. BARROW, Member of the Imperial College of Vienna, Royal College of Surgeons, London, who may be personally consulted at his residence, No. 107 Prince-st., (few blocks west of Broadway,) New-York, from 11 o'clock in the morning till 2, and from 4 o'clock till 8 in the evening, (Sundays excepted.)

TRIESEMAR No. 1—Is the remedy of general and local debility, loss of vital power, premature decay, and all the disorders of conjugal life, arising from early abuse, &c.; all physical impediments rendering the married state inexpedient, thus rendering it not invariable to those entering the marriage state.

TRIESEMAR No. 2—Entirely eradicates all traces of those diseases with which copaiba and cubeby have so long been thought an antidote for, to the ruin of the health of a vast portion of the population.

TRIESEMAR No. 3—Is the great European remedy for that class of disorders which, unfortunately, the English physician treats with mercury, to the inevitable destruction of the patient's constitution, and which all the Sarsaparilla in the world cannot remove.

TRIESEMAR No. 4, 5 and 6 are prepared in the form of a lozenge, devoid of taste or smell, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket. Sold in tin cases and divided in separate doses, or enveloped by Velpeau, Lallemand, Roux, Ricord, &c., &c. Price $3 each, or four cases in one for $9, which saves $3; and in $27 cases, whereby there is a saving of $7.

The nine-dollar cases of the Triesemar and the large sizes will be forwarded by Dr. Barrow, carriage paid, immediately on receiving a remittance, to any part of the world, securely packed, and addressed according to the instructions of the writer, thus securing to the public genuine European preparations, and effectually protecting them from spurious and pernicious imitations. The three-dollar cases sent as usual, but not free of carriage.

No. 107 Prince-st., (few blocks west of Broadway,) New-York.

To be had also of C. H. RING, No. 192 Broadway, N. Y.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE

By Telegraph to the New-York Tribune.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

Discussion of Kansas Affairs by the President and Governor Walker.

Total Disenfranchisement Exclusive of the Kansas Constitution.

DURABLE DIVISION in THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The Administration and Central American Affairs.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Tribune.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Nov. 29.

Governor WALKER had a long and very friendly interview with the President to-day. They discussed Kansas affairs at length, especially relative to the propriety of convening the session of the Constitutional Convention by and referring the entire instrument to the people. The conversation, gentlemen who have seen the Governor recently, parted friends, and this interview has the discussion of the Kansas question for the present.

Some of Walker's friends hope for the ultimate success of their views, but the hope is fallacious. Those informed are too radical for compromise. Upon healthy is inevitable, involving a split of the National Democracy.—WALKER leading the Conservative, and BUCHANAN the Fire-Eaters.

The Governor's opinion of the Constitution is not modified in the Slavery clause, which is made perpetual, but on the refusal of the Convention to submit the question to vote against as well as for the Constitution. He regards this as a violation of the Federal Constitution, of the Nebraska-Kansas bill, of popular sovereignty, and of the right of self-government.

The President insists that, as the Constitutional Convention was authorized by Congress, he is bound to abide its action, whatever it may be, while Walker holds that the application of his doctrine to Kansas is bound to submit the entire Constitution to a popular vote, amounts to a simple assertion of the right of Congress to force any Constitution on the Territory, instead of leaving the people to decide for themselves. He is apprehensive that the people of Kansas would reject the instrument if they had the opportunity. He states that the Constitution was signed by only forty-three out of the one hundred of the Convention—some refusing from Conservatives. The great majority even of the Slavery men condemned the action of the Convention as extravagant and unconstitutional usurpation. There in the Territory who support the Constitution are believed to comprise a ridiculously small minority, with very numbers who never intend with the Slavery men with refuse to participate in the Election.

Governor Walker has never yet seen the Constitution, and probably outside knows what it is. All efforts to obtain a copy failed. The officers having it in charge may make it whatever they please, without any popular check. There is no provision for its amendment, and it will be forever out of the power of the Territory, if once adopted, unless the Slavery clause is stricken out. The Territorial Government never can be set in operation under it without by the Federal arms.

Governor Walker declares that he cannot sanction the action of the Convention without violating every pledge he ever gave, and sacrificing his entire political influence.

If no change is made in the arrangement of the Slavery Government, the President will necessarily confirm the Governor of the Territory to exercise office in 18 days. This, with his sentiments, Walker cannot do, and will not—nay will he resign.

If the President adventures it his duty to force the Constitution, directly contrary to the spirit of the Kansas-Nebraska Act, in support of which WALKER staked his political future at the solicitation of the Administration, depend upon it the President will be compelled to assume the responsibility of removing the Governor.

The effect of all this, if the President persists, will be that the Executive will find himself in a minority in both houses of Congress, for WALKER will be sustained by a decided majority in each. He cannot be spared out of the Democratic Party, as were RANDAL and BUCHANAN.

It has been suggested of late that the Administration will insist upon an abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, instead of agreeing to a satisfactory interpretation of the instrument. This is a mistake.

Mr. BUCHANAN, when Minister at London, only adhered to the treaty, repeatedly insisted that the Convention should be observed according to its simple and obvious interpretation, which he held to be that neither Great Britain nor the United States should hold any territorial possessions there, or occupy, colonize, fortify or exercise dominion over any part of the two Americas, including Central America.

The Washington correspondent of the London Times has put the revolutionary and present policy of the Government of England, and are to be understood as indicating its readiness to accept this interpretation and act upon it in good faith, the President will close the negotiation upon those terms without an hour's delay. This Lord stated to state upon high authority. Anything short of this cannot be accepted by the Administration, and will not be under any circumstances.

Mr. BUCHANAN, minister to the United States is not regarded of any practical importance, the treaty was formally having granted Costa Rica's right to a commission, very, in the matter of the Nicaragua Transit route, and claimed the United States to resist the exercise of this right to grant such preconceived rights.

Rumor says, early in the session of Congress, will introduce a bill to admit the Territorial Government of Minnesota, but probably under the name of "Colorado." He will not make a similar move with reference to the creation of the Territorial Government of Utah, for the reason that a part of the country proposed to be incorporated in the new Territory now belongs to the State of California, which has given her Legislature of her will, upon which the Legislature of California shall indicate the approval of such an arrangement is anticipated, there will be no difficulty in accomplishing it.

Advices from Louisiana indicate that Senator BENJAMIN's friends of reduction are flattering, for the reason that the Democrats of the western part of the State feel upon having a Cabinet from their party west of the Mississippi. This means, but this, as the Eastern part of Louisiana is in the hands of the Americans, and the Democratic character of the State is due entirely to the Creole.

Some fine prospects for our American cousins!

From the Lexington Observer.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Nov. 1, 1857.

To George Anderson, Esq., Ex-Chief Justice, &c., Lexington, Ky.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have read with infinite gratification your publication in the Missouri Statesman on the decision of the Supreme Court in the Missouri Compromise case, and concur with you most heartily, as you will soon see in the sixth volume of the Abridgment of the Debates of Congress, now in the press (the eleventh Appendix of New-York) and also in my "Examination" which I have made of the same judgment of the decision in a little pamphlet of 200 pages, likewise now in the same press, and entirely at your service. This decision—that part of it which relates to the nullity of the Compromise act—and to the self-extension of the Constitution to Territories with the heartiest political blow that ever fell upon my heart, and left me in a state of total impossibility of remaining silent under it. Review it as you do—as decidedly wrong in itself, and entirely extrajudicial, and of no more weight than the opinion of any half-dozen equally-respectable citizens coming to the same conclusion, (in much part,) upon inconsistent, incompatible, and contradictory reasons. That compromise act was a political enactment, made by the political power, for political reasons, than these reasons, I suppose, that ever influenced human legislation—the hope thereby to reconcile a divided and distracted country, and to prevent our glorious Union from spitting asunder. As such a political enactment the Court had no right to judge it; and if the Court had, it was fairly before it—which it did not; for the Judiciary cannot judge political questions, either of right nor in fact; for these questions depend upon considerations of policy which the judiciary cannot touch, and not upon the interpretation of phrases, in which the Court is confined. The same of the self-extension of the Constitution to Territories: it was a political question as to what that Constitution should extend, and it was limited by its own words to States, and has been so acted upon by every Congress, and by all authorities, (State and Federal, Legislative, Executive, and Judicial,) from the commencement of the Federal Government to the present day. And I venture the assertion that there has not been one single member of Congress, in the seventy years in which Congresses have been held, who has not voted for objects in the Territories (local internal improvements, for example) which they would not vote for in a State, and upon the express ground that the Constitution did not extend to Territories. The ordinance of 1787 was a Territorial Constitution, given to Territories as a sovereign gives a charter to his subjects; and so much was made in concert with the Constitution, as you well say, and indispensable to the formation of the Constitution; and as such was provided for—doubly provided for—in the new Government; first, by the clause in the Constitution which devolves all the "engagements" of the Congress of the Confederation upon the new Federal Congress; and, secondly, by the act of the new Congress of Aug. 7, 1789—the eighth act passed by the first Congress under Washington—adopting that ordinance to the new Constitution, and adopting it in every word which it contained as a law of the new Government.

You will see in the Abridged Debates (the notes as well as the text) that full justice is done to yourself, and to all the patriotic men who acted with you in that great measure of reconciliation and pacification; and also in my "Examination" of the Court's opinion—that part of it which I deem political and extrajudicial, and clear-cut. As for what concerned the individuals before the Court as parties in the record, I have nothing to say. That part was judicial, and whether rightfully or wrongfully gotten hold of, was decided. I let it alone, as it was the decision of the tribunal of last resort; and the peace and good order of society require all questions of personal rights to be settled and done with. But as to political doctrine, in which the Supreme Court has gone so far beyond the Judiciary, I have thought it in a full duty to question, judicially, and in which it decided upon a view of the Constitution which had no more to do with it than the adventures of Robinson Crusoe, and then reversed the action of the Government for seventy years, and made a new constitution in all that relates to Territorial legislation: in such case I have felt it to be my duty, as one of the few survivors of the old school, to raise my voice against it, and to appeal to the candid intelligence of my fellow-citizens to come to the defence of our Constitution, such as our fathers made it, and as it was administered for two generations.

I mean what I say, when I say the Supreme Court had as well been looking into Robinson Crusoe as looking into the Constitution of the United States to find the power of Congress to legislate for Territories: for it is not there, but in the ordinance of '87, adopted by the Constitution and by the first Congress under Washington, and in their right as sovereign proprietors, having the right to acquire and become their duty under the State cession acts and under the treaties of cession. The "needful rules and regulation-clause," as the Court said, gave no power to govern the Territories; it only applied to property, and that the property of the United States—its territory, id est, land, and—in other property, id est, personal estate. It conferred no powers of Government, and that for the reason known to everybody at the time, and to nobody (hardly) now, videlicet: because the Government of the Territories was provided for in another place—namely, in the ordinance of 1787, and protected by a clause in the Constitution, and adopted by Congress Aug. 7, 1789, and in the right of sovereign proprietors. The Court looked in the wrong place to find the power of Congress to legislate for Territories.

I was breaking down under the appalling attack which fell upon me when I was writing the "Examination," and had to leave some heads unfinished, and also to add some part after I had given up the world. My physician, Dr. MAY, saw with astonishment that I rose from what he knew I considered the bed of death, (and which he feared to be so,) and went to my table and wrote. I was adding something to the "Examination," and could hardly refrain from a postscript: "This is my political testament, written with a dying hand." Well! I did not die, but I have to; and will die upon the truth and justice of what I wrote.

Among the heads sketched, but not filled up, are the Florida Territorial transactions of 1821, in which Gov. JACKSON, commissioned with the power of a Captain-General and Intendant of Cuba, under an act of Congress continuing temporarily the Spanish system of Government in that Territory, and in which he found occasion to act up to the letter of that law and commission, visiting in himself the supreme, civil, military, executive and judicial functions, using the military for his arm, and his own fiat for authority, sending Gov. CALLAVA to the calaboose, and having Judge FERNANDEZ brought before him at the point of the bayonet, for issuing a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of the imprisoned Governor; and laying divers others by the heels for complicity in CALLAVA's fault, to wit, refusing to deliver up, and intending to carry off judicial records, on which depended redress to orphan children, who had been despoiled of their father's property for fifteen years, and all which actings and doings of Gov. JACKSON, exercising over Florida the powers of a Captain-General and Intendant of Cuba, were approved expressly by the Monroe Administration, (and you know who composed that Administration,) and impliedly sanctioned by each House of Congress in their refusal to act upon the resolutions of its inquiring committees, but all on the ground that the Constitution of the United States did not extend to a Territory, and that an act of Congress had carried into Florida any of its provisions, any habeas corpus act, any jury trial, or any warrant, general or special, or any security against seizure of persons, search of houses, or rapture of papers and effects. This head, growing out of the transactions in Florida, so recent in date, and so apt to the argument of our argument, was merely sketched and sketched in the "Examination," but afterwards well developed in the forthcoming sixth volume of the Abridgment.

In the same "Examination" will be seen the manner in which the act abrogating the Missouri Compromise was passed, and the objects for which it was passed, and of which it was only the first step and the entering wedge; whereof the good people of the United States are at present profoundly ignorant; foreign reporting has almost killed all popular knowledge of Congress proceedings, confining their report to results, too brief and obscure to show how Congress acts; and yet this is almost the only report of Congress doings which the people will read in this go-a-head age of steam and electricity.

It is a long time since we saw each other; and what is called politics have sadly run down since that time, and especially in the last Presidential term, presenting but little for the attraction of any man who has nothing but the public good in view; but here is a question of a new kind, national and elevated, on which all who are for the Constitution as our fathers made it, and as their administrations and their generation, and as the next generation administered it, (and that without distinction of party or default of a man,) may come together and state. For one, I can give no political aid or comfort to any man or party, in any future election, who shall uphold the opinions of the Supreme Court in declaring the nullity of the Missouri Compromise; and in decreeing the self-extension of the Constitution of Territories, carrying Slavery with it, and preventing Congress and the people of the Territory from saying yea or nay to its introduction or population.

I am now well recovered, and working as usual, and expect to finish the Abridgment next Summer, and then to add another volume to the two of the Thirty Years' View, bringing it down to 1850, if I live and think it all events to the time of the Florida Administration, (and you know who composed that Administration,) and impliedly sanctioned by each House of Congress in their refusal to act upon the resolutions of its inquiring committees, and in which

[illegible] and his name and his power for that time, unchecked and oriented [illegible]

Respectfully, THOS. H. BENTON.

NEW-YORK CITY.

SERIOUS BURNING.—Mrs. WEBMAN and two children, residing in Fifty-second-street near Eighth-avenue, were seriously burned on Wednesday evening, by the explosion of a can of burning fluid, which took place while Mrs. Webman was filling a lighted lamp. Two officers of the Twenty-second Ward heard the screams of the sufferers and saved their lives by tearing their clothing from them. One of the children is not expected, however, to live.

JULIA BRINKMAN, a colored woman, residing at No. 236 East Tenth-street, was severely burned on Wednesday night, by her clothes catching fire from the stove. She was sent to Bellevue Hospital, but refused admittance on account of her color. She was then taken to the City Hospital and admitted.

FATAL OMNIBUS CASUALTY.—STEPHEN RILEY, a boy residing with his parents at No. 78 Third-avenue, was run over yesterday in the Bowery, near Tenth-street, by one of the Bull Head line omnibuses and so severely injured that he died a few minutes afterwards. He was trying to avoid being run over by a drove of cattle when he stumbled under the feet of the horses attached to the omnibus. The driver immediately reversed the omnibus at the Seventeenth Ward Station-house and was detained to await the result of the Coroner's inquest, which will be held to-day.

Police Intelligence.

A DARING THIEF.—A young Irishman, giving his name as John Dunn, in company with two young companions, went, on Wednesday afternoon, into a clothing store in Eighth-avenue and pretended that he wanted to purchase a coat. He got on a coat of length, that suited him, and made a rush from the store. Officer Murphy, of the Twenty-second Ward, overhauled him and recovered the coat. Yesterday Justice FLANDREAU committed the daring scamp to answer.

SNATCHING A CLOAK.—As Mr. Elias Combe was passing up Seventh-avenue, at a late hour Wednesday night, an Irish shoemaker named Barney Carr, snatched his cloak from his shoulders and ran off with it. Mr. Combe started after the thief, but he dodged into a rear house in Forty-second-street, where he was afterwards found by a policeman, and the cloak recovered. Carr was committed to answer.

Fires.

IN CLIFF-STREET.—At a few minutes before 3 o'clock, yesterday morning, a fire broke out in the house and steam factory of DAVID BANNAN, Jr., No. 84 Cliff-street. The whole of the interior of the building and stock was burned. The firemen were promptly on the ground, but owing to the slate peak upon the roof they were unable to bring the water to bear upon the fire, until the cross beams were burnt in two. Mr. BANNAN states his loss as about $4,500, which is covered by insurance in the United States Insurance Company. The building was owned by the Orphan Asylum, and is damaged about $2,000, which is covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

IN LAURENS-STREET.—About 8 o'clock P. M. on Wednesday, a fire caught in the bakery of Mr. BOWEN, No. 15 Laurens-street, by the tube being out of order. The loss on the building was about $100, and on stock $60. Fully insured in the New-York Fire and Marine Insurance Company.

IN CANAL-STREET.—A few minutes after 12 o'clock yesterday morning, a fire broke out in the millinery store of Mrs. GAY, No. 272 Canal-street. The fire was extinguished with a few pails of water. Damage trifling.

Coroner's Inquest.

RUN OVER BY A BAKER'S CART.—Coroner PERRY held an inquest, yesterday, at the Tenth Ward Station, on the body of Mrs. ELEANOR RITTER, who died from the effects of being run over by a baker's cart on Tuesday, as reported in Wednesday's TRIB. The evidence showed that FRANCIS RILEY, the driver of the cart, was to blame; and Justice WOOD held him in $1,000 bail to answer. Deceased was 60 years of age; and the widow of the late CHARTER RITTER.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN BROOKLYN—ACCIDENTS.—This day was generally observed in Brooklyn, in obedience to the request of the Executive. Most of the places of business were closed, and many of the churches were open. There was nothing occurred in the streets to relieve the monotony of the day.

A man while playing ball in Washington Park had his kneepan broken by the ball coming against it with great violence. He was taken in charge by the Fourth Precinct Police and conducted home.

Mr. DANIEL TRESDWELL, of the County Clerk's Office, while skating on Nolan's Pond, Ninth Ward, fell and fractured one of his arms.

NEW-JERSEY.

SUICIDE IN HOBOKEN.—Mrs. POND, a lady about 35 years of age, wife of CHARLES Z. POND, one of the proprietors of the Atlantic Hotel, at Hoboken, committed suicide on Tuesday night, by taking arsenic. When it became known to the members of the family that she had taken poison, medical aid was immediately summoned, but it was found too late to save her life. The Rev. ARTHUR CUYLER was then sent for and administered the rites of the church previous to her decease. She seemed desirous of leaving the world, and parted with her husband and friends with calmness and composure. Justice WEBSTER on Wednesday summoned a jury and held an inquest on the body. It appeared in the evidence that deceased had been subject to fits of melancholy which had been recently aggravated by physical disorganization, and had in consequence become tired of life. The verdict of the jury was that she had voluntarily terminated her existence by poison. Her remains were yesterday taken to Vermont, to be deposited in the family vault.

DISMISSAL OF HOBOKEN WATER COMMISSIONERS.—The trial of Messrs. CHARLES, CLINTON and IRELAND, members of the Hoboken Board of Water Commissioners, for alleged mal-administration in office, which has been for some time in progress before the Hoboken Council, was concluded on Wednesday evening, and resulted in a dismissal of the Commissioners by that body. The charges brought against the Commissioners were nine in number, prominent among which were: the making of an injudicious contract with Jersey City; non-compliance with the law in advertising for proposals for laying pipe and introducing the water; and refusing to allow one of the Commissioners, who had been elected by the Council, to fill a vacancy, to participate in their proceedings. The vote upon which they were dismissed was:

AYES—Councilmen Van Blair and Bampton.

After the rendition of judgment, PETER MULROAN, Esq., Counsel for the Commissioners, appeared before the Council, and gave notice that he should make immediate application to the Supreme Court of the State for a writ of certiorari to remove the case before that bench, and he yesterday went to Trenton for that purpose.

THANKSGIVING IN JERSEY CITY AND HOBOKEN.—There was an almost entire suspension of business in these places yesterday, and services were held in most of the churches in the morning. A large number of target companies from New-York visited Hoboken, and martial music was almost incessant from morning till night.

COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

THURSDAY, Nov. 26—P. M.

The day was kept as a close holiday on the Merchants', Corn and Stock Exchanges. The steamer Vanderbilt, from Southampton Saturday, Nov. 14, arrived at an early hour this morning, with the full details of and newspaper comments on the Money panic in England and Scotland, which resulted in the suspension of the penalties of the Bank Charter, and the subsequent effect on the markets. We have devoted a considerable space to these extracts in another page of this paper. It will be noticed that the views of the leading London journals here, before and after the crisis, were strongly against the policy of interfering with the Bank Charter, except as a last necessity, and such necessity the financial writers insists ought not to have been brought upon the only banking establishment in the Kingdom whose conduct had been consistent and conservative, as well as liberal, throughout the trouble, and whose management is in no wise responsible for the over-trading and over-banking which brought about the humiliating alternative of Government interference with the Charter. It is pretty plainly intimated that the Joint-Stock Banks and Discount Companies ought to have met the difficulty, as they had mainly lent the enormous facilities which brought it about, by their own suspension of payments, (upon the deficits and accounts current in their charge,) for 20 days, issuing in the meantime their obligations at 9 ⅌ cent. per annum to such dealers as desired to use their money in this way.

But wherever the responsibility ought in fairness properly to have rested, it is quite certain that the remedy devolved at last upon the Bank of England and the Government. That great establishment, in one sense, paid the penalty of its own liberality or high sense of public duty by so nearly exhausting the resources of its banking department as to render the intervention of the Government a last necessity. We intimated yesterday that the Bank return of the 11th November, the day of the panic, would probably, when received here, show the establishment as nearly run down as the New-York banks were on the 13th October. That return is now in hand. It appears that instead of half a million, as estimated, more than a million sterling in Gold was sent in the aid of the Scotch and Irish banks, between the 4th and 11th November, principally on the 9th and 10th. The Bank, nevertheless, during the week, left no means unemployed to relieve the pressure for discount accommodation. The mercantile line was expanded £3,435,202, or about seventeen millions dollars; further sales of Government stock were made to the extent of £675,276; the whole increase of the public and private deposits was at once employed in discounting for the relief of pressing applicants at the bank, and the Bank Note reserve was run down to the unprecedentedly small remainder of £957,710, or less than five millions dollars! Liberality could go no further, and without waiting any communication from the Bank on the subject, the Government suspended the restriction on the Bank Note issue. This act, however, does not render any part of the issue, old or new, irredeemable, so long as the Bullion in the issue department, amounting on the return of Nov. 11 to £6,866,065 sterling, holds out. Should the expansion of the currency, now authorized, have the effect to exhaust this Bullion reserve, hereafter a second order in Council, or an act of Parliament, would be rendered necessary to authorize the non-payment of Specie altogether. No such result, however, is anticipated. About $750,000 sterling in Gold was reported near at hand from Australia, and as the export demand had ceased, and the run upon the Scotch and Irish banks had been arrested, this large sum, with others returned from the country, would probably soon go into the Bank. It is not yet certain, indeed, that the Bank will be compelled to avail of the authority granted by the Treasury Letter of Lord PALMERSTON and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It may be that the simple publication of such authority will so far strengthen the Bullion in the Issue Department as to supply the Banking Bureau with an adequate supply of Notes within the charter.

It is announced that the City of Glasgow Bank is ready to resume business, on the reasonable assurance of the depositors; the condition of the concern being one of undoubted solvency.

The latest quotations of American Railway Stocks in London show a final improvement on the advices by the Atlantic. The Daily News of Saturday says that Illinois Central shares were in demand and firmer. The sales of New-York Central are also 1@1½ ⅌ cent. higher.

The Bank of France lost over seven millions of dollars in Gold from the October to the November monthly report, the reserve being down to something near the same figure as the Bank of England. The discount rate is raised to 10 ⅌ cent., but the French Funds keep steady, nevertheless.

The Cotton market at Liverpool, on Friday, 13th, recovered nearly a penny on the extreme decline of the early part of the week, and left off firm. Breadstuffs steady.

The fresh failures announced by the Vanderbilt, though mostly attributed to the American panic, are not of general importance to this side. The firm of COODINGTON & Co., in the Iron trade, has a New-York connection of the same name. A statement of the affairs of BRAND & Co., the London correspondents of Messrs. GARDNER, of this City, will be found among our foreign extracts.

An Appeal to Railroad Stockholders.

Judging from the many communications which have appeared in the columns of this and other papers in all parts of the country during the last few months, as well as from the public discussions and individual opinions everywhere freely expressed, an almost universal and deep-seated sentiment now prevails in favor of an essential reformation in the management of our railroad (and some other) corporations.

Many very sensible ideas have been advanced, both in regard to the existing evils and their appropriate remedies. In addition to the causes of complaint, heretofore named, and generally conceded, are the furnishing materials and supplies by members of the Board, transporting freight at reduced rates, and speculating in the securities of the Company by its officers and managers and their friends, and in various other ways using their positions as means to promote their private interests at the expense of the stockholders.

This list of existing evils might be extended to an almost indefinite length—but the great difficulty is not so much in exposing the existing evils, or in suggesting an efficient remedy for them, as in applying the cure when discovered.

As in regard to many other maladies, "prevention is better than cure."

In reference to both these points, (viz., the evils and their remedy,) the first and greatest obstacles to be encountered are the indifference and timidity of stockholders themselves. There appears to be a general impression on the part of many, that their associates are more interested than they, and that the other stockholders will, of course, take care of their property; while others are restrained from taking any part in the annual elections, and from making any investigations into the affairs of the Company, from the fear of giving offence to their friends in the Board of Managers.

So long as such sentiments so generally prevail, it is both foolish and vain to expect any favorable change, and unjust to make any further complaints.

Too much reliance has also hitherto been placed upon future investigations. The same obstacles which have heretofore prevented stockholders exercising a proper scrutiny and supervision of their managers, exists in a tenfold degree to defeat a rigid examination, and an honest and faithful report on the part of an "Investigating Committee."

The effectual and conscientious discharge of such duties requires more time than competent men are willing to bestow upon the subject, and more moral courage than but few are found to possess. The past history of such investigations affords no ground of hope for any favorable results from such means.

In considering this subject, it should be constantly kept in mind, that railroad managers, like all other men, are fallible, and liable to be overcome by temptations—and the more subject to this latter infirmity, by reason of the many strong inducements with which they are surrounded, and which are peculiar to that particular business.

This danger is much enhanced by the usage (now [illegible] and perpetuated body, not accountable to the stockholders, or amenable to any higher or other authority.

To interfere in an election is regarded as open hostility, to propose any reformation or investigation is stigmatized as a personal insult.

These things could not use to be, nor is there any good reason for any such inferences.

The old adage that "An honest man will not object to be watched, and a rogue has no right to make such objection," has in it more good sense than poetry.

Here should be the starting point in the proposed reformation.

It is not necessary to assume that any officer, in any Company, has been dishonest—or even that he has been inefficient or careless.

Every stockholder should strenuously exercise his inherent right to choose for himself who shall act as trustee for the safe-keeping and good management of his property, and every other gentleman should cheerfully concede to him that privilege. The same duty and privilege should exist in regard to any inquiries or examinations he may desire to make. This common-sense proposition, which is acknowledged and practiced in all ordinary departments of business, being granted, the reformation is half completed.

A few suggestions, in detail, for accomplishing some of the objects so fervently and generally desired, will now be considered.

Preliminary, to the adoption of any general system, let an informal meeting of stockholders of such companies as are about to hold their annual meetings be called for general consideration, the selection and nomination of suitable persons to fill the various offices, and the adoption of a general plan of operations at the ensuing meeting. Let such stockholders attend in person or by special proxy; at which meeting let the stockholders adopt a suitable code of by-laws for their own government and the general government of the Board and the principal officers, specially indicating their powers and privileges, and fixing the salaries of all the principal officers, who, as well as the managers, shall in all cases be elected by the stockholders.

Such powers are expressly given in many of the charters granted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania and some other States; and if such authority is not sufficiently implied in all cases, no time should be lost in obtaining the necessary enactments.

The "principal officers" above named, should include a President, Vice-President, Treasurer, Secretary and Auditor; the last by no means the least important as an independent officer of the Company.

These By-laws should also provide for the appointment of at least two Standing Committees, viz.: An Executive and Finance Committee, to consist of at least three members each—the former to advise with and assist the President, and in the intervals of the meetings of the Board, to "authorize" and "approve" his acts; and the latter to exercise the same functions in regard to the Treasurer, and to "approve" all bills before being paid, the same having first been audited and "certified" by the auditor. If necessary to secure the faithful services of these Committees, provide for the payment to them of a suitable salary; it will prove an economical expenditure.

Provide in your By-laws that no certificates, bonds, or other securities, nor any checks, notes, acceptances or other evidences of indebtedness shall ever be signed in blank, and let the former always be countersigned by your Auditor in addition to the signatures of your two principal officers. Let all checks for an amount of more than one hundred dollars be countersigned by your President or one of the Finance Committee, and be drawn to the order of the party to whom the payment is due. It is true, these measures will be attended with some inconvenience, but security and profit to the stockholders are the principal objects aimed at in this proposition. The ease and comfort of the officers, and the convenience of the stock-jobbers and the "grateful public," have been sufficiently cared for in times past.

Let your by-laws limit your floating debt; interdict all dealers and connections at the Company's expense; prohibit the issue of all free passes, as well as the more important evil of purchasing materials and supplies of any officer of the Company or their relatives, either directly or indirectly.

Provide, also, that no branch or connecting road shall be constructed or leased, no subscription to the new stock or bonds of any other Company be made, and no construction account be opened, without the approval of the stockholders at some general meeting to be regularly called, and let it be especially made the duty of the Secretary to call a meeting of the stockholders at any time, on the written request of any ten stockholders holding or representing stock amounting in the aggregate to one-tenth or one-eighth the whole amount of the capital of the Company.

Let the stockholders retain in their own hands their very appropriate right to decide upon the payment of all dividends; and to this end let your By-laws provide for quarterly or at least semi-annual meetings of the stockholders, at each of which meetings the Board shall present a full and particular statement of the affairs of the Company, "vouched" by the auditor, or an examining committee from among the stockholders, appointed at a previous meeting.

The advantages of these frequent meetings and free discussions of the affairs of the Company will be many and great, (and quite manifest, also, upon a little reflection,) not the least of which will be the development of much otherwise undiscovered talent, which may be made available in the future management of the affairs of the Company.

Many other important suggestions might be added, but enough have already been presented to show the necessity of some prompt action, and to test the question whether stockholders will come forward to the rescue of their property, and to the restoration of the character and credit of the vast railroad system of the United States—an interest which now amounts to nearly or quite a thousand millions of dollars, in comparison with which interest every other species of enterprise may well be denominated small.

Let this question be maturely considered and thoroughly discussed; the object is eminently worthy if all the attention that can be bestowed upon it, and the results will prove an ample compensation for all the time and efforts so expended; but let not stockholders any longer stand aloof and denounce "dishonest managers," and complain at the loss or depreciation of their property while they will not raise a finger or contribute a cent towards the application of so simple and effectual a remedy.

It is generally conceded, that with honest and efficient management, railroad investments, as a class, would prove as safe and remunerative as any other in our country. Shall they yield their legitimate returns? Stockholders! you must decide this question.

ONE OF THEM.

The Stone Debt of Missouri.

From the Missouri Republican.

The House of Representatives completed the good work which it commenced the day previous by taking up and passing the Railroad bill, as amended in the Senate. That amendment, it will be remembered, provided for a mill tax, and the issue of Revenue Bonds to meet interest that may accrue in January and July next, and some other amendments of a salutary character. Various amendments were proposed, but the only one of any importance that found favor with the House was one postponing the levying of the mill tax until January, 1859. As we have said, the bill makes ample provision for saving the credit of the State in any emergency, and thus a great point has been gained. It gives to the world assurance that no failure will take place in the payment of our interest, and must have the effect of appreciating our Bonds in the market.

Upon this termination of legislation on the subject at this session, we are well satisfied, and we are very sure all will be satisfied that the people of the State of Missouri will, with still greater unanimity, approve and endorse the proposed mill tax. Outside of the Capitol we have never heard any opposition whatever to the levying of this tax. This subject has been discussed in the newspapers of the State and everywhere else; and, instead of the proposition being unpopular with the masses, the politicians may rest assured that it will be sustained by them. Taxpayers of St. Louis, paying a tax of seventy-five millions of dollars, will find no party in it willing to state its success on this issue. Nor will any such issue be made, except in counties paying little or no revenue into the Treasury, and we advise the politicians not to deceive themselves on this question. They will be beaten wherever it is made. The people have less fear of taxation for such a purpose than their representatives seem to have, and they will show it on the first opportunity.

The London Markets.

Per Africa. LIVERPOOL, Friday, Nov. 13, 1857—6 P. M.

Owing to the financial crisis, the cessation of business in almost all articles of our Colonial and Foreign Produce markets has continued. On Monday the Bank of England raised its minimum rate of discount to 10 ⅌ cent. ⅌ annum; but the applications increased to such an extent that yesterday the Government sanctioned an unlimited issue of notes by that institution at a rate of interest not below 10 ⅌ cent. for the excess beyond the amount authorized by the Charter. This has given more ease and confidence; but there is still a demand at 10 ⅌ cent. Consols leave off 89¼@89¾ for money, and 89¾@90⅜ for account. Specie questions are nominal. The figures, cents.
